PARIS, Feb. 21 (ONS) - A film in which President Mitterrand's brother-in-law, Roger Hanin, plays a Jewish gang boss has stirred up controversy here over Jewish involvement in organized crime.

Extreme traditional wings of the Jewish community believe the film, Le Grand Par don, will stir up anti-Semitism - but it was made with the cooperation of leading rabbis, one of whom appears in the film. The story is loosely based on the Zemmour gang war in which four brothers repatriated from Algeria after independnce led an underworld battle with a rival group which caused more than 30 deaths in Paris during the 1970s. The subject has become topical as a result of a new wave of Jewish gang activity here based on international drug smuggling with Israeli connec-

Because of recent controversies in France over the Giscard government's alleged apathy toward Israel — hostility by the 700,000-strong Jewish community is largely blamed for Giscard's election defeat last year - the decision to release the film was a delicate affair. The choice of the leading actor, Roger Hanin, who has considerable cultural influence on the president, added to the polit-

The director, Alexandre Arcady, anticipating a reaction from Jews, worked in close cooperation with Rabbi Leon Fina, a prison chaplain who previously officiated at the Grand Synagogue in Oran, Algeria, and the French Grand Rabbi Alain Goldmann, who lent a Paris synagogue for scenes in the film. Rabbi Fina is also one of the picture's stars.

The film brings out a resemblance between the close-knit Jewish gangster families with their international connections and the Cath-

The real controversy is going on inside the community itself, where what amounts to a campaign has been launched to counteract criticism from strict Jews who feel it is an attack on their faith. "It can be healthy to show the sort of reality we see in this film." Tribune's editor, Rabbi Jacquot Grunewald, said, "Jewish gangsterism is a real thing and trying to hide it would be renouncing any attempt to find a remedy." One of the strongest themes of the film is the condemnation of the Jewish gang boss by some religious leaders, who call him the "shame of the community."

Hanin's role is similar to that of Marlon Brando in The Godfather as he leads his "family" through a tangle of extreme violence. The two gang bosses finally come into collision when he exploits a truce during the sixday war to wipe out his Jewish rivals.

Although events differ from the real life war involving the Zemmour brothers, Rogers Hanin's role is effectively that of William Zemmour, leader of the Pieds-Noirs gang which fought the rival "Sicilians," a breakway group of Jewish criminals who tried to depose their former leaders. The Zemmour brothers were among the French who had fled independent Algeria. Using the fortune their father accumulated by shady means in Algeria, they took over the protection, and gambling rackets in France in a wave of unprecedented gangland brutality.

During the gun battles, police raided a Pieds-Noirs meeting in a Paris cafe and shot William Zemmour dead. He was given an extravagent funeral to match bis lavish life-(Continued on back page)

Speaking to a party of journalists representing Saudi Arabian publications, President Marcos said he had discussed aspects of this cooperation with Crown Prince Fahd at the Cancun Summit of North-South leaders. Prince Fahd invited him to visit the Kingdom

"Saudi Arabia is already helping us," he said. It has absorbed 150-160,000 Filipino workers in the industry, constructiom trade, hospitals and households. This brings, according to official estimates, about $500 million a year in addition to what the homegoing Filipinos carry in cash when their contracts

Marcos said Saudi Arabía has a crucial role to play in the Middle East question. He offered to support the Saudi peace plan if it reaches the Security Council. And considering the Philippine relations with the U.S. which rejected the plan, the offer and the support appear to have special interest. He is likely to reaffirm his stand on the plan when he visits

Asked about the situation in the southern islands where there has been a Muslim movement for autonomy, President Marcos said that the violence has subsided to a low level of attacks on security forces after the carrying out by the government of the referendum contained in the Tripoli agreement of 1977 through the mediation of Libya's president Qaddafi. The leadership of the Moro National Liberation Front rejected the result and accused the government of malpractises.

Marcos claimed he had invited the Muslim leaders of the movement who were abroad to participate in the referendum, take part framing the questionaire and contest the election. Their top leader Nur Miswari agreed at first, sent in some questions and was offered a post in the autonomous government. But he changed his mind and stayed behind. Meanwhile, the Organization of Islamic Conference is striving to bring about another reconciliation with a view to settling this problem once and for all. Its Secretary-General Habib Chatti is expected to visit the country soon. With the military situation apparently

His greatest relief came when Libya suspended aid to the movement following the signing of the Tripoli agreement. "Libya at one time gave the movement 20,000 rifles in one single consignment," he said. "But none is forthcoming at present, much to our satisfac-tion," he added. The south is not President Marcos' only worry. There has been a Communist insurgency in the north by a Pekingoriented faction. The Moscow-oriented group dissolved itself and some of its leaders have gone into business. Although officially the government does not accuse China of directly supporting the insurgency, it is common knowledge here who is behind it. China denies any dealing with it. However, the insurgency has lost much of its old fury because partly of China's deep involvement in Cambodia fighting because of China's own growing friendship with ASEAN which includes this country. Malaysia, Thailand, Indonesia and Singapore the other members and China could well lose much of that hardearned

Both President Marcos and other officials believe' this is one of the best periods of: '. their national history since independence from the U.S. 1949. There is relative peace in the country and an improved economic situation which generates a per capita income of $700, far down the line compared with other Asians like Japan, Taiwan, Singapore and South Korea but higher up the scale than many others.

His No. 1 pet program, the land reform system for the needy, has enabled landless farmers to own property although it has infuriated others. The government buys off land from former feudal lords, and there are quite a few of them. The land is apportioned to poor applicants who become small-time landlords instead of all-time serfs. But the former chieftains are unhappy because they only get 10 percent of the value of the land with the balance in government bonds which mature in many years.

Not all the farmers are satisfied. A few complain of official corruption, greed and abuse of power.

TOKYO, Feb. 21 (AP) — Japanese men consider their lives are worth an average of $326,000, the Dai-Tokyo Fire and Marine Insurance Co. reported Sunday.

Dai-Tokyo said it questioned 4,096 men selected at random in a nationwide survey on the monetary value of their lives during November 1981.

The insurance company reported that 27.8 percent of the men valued their own lives at about $217,000 and 24.4 percent said they were worth twice that, about $435,000.

One man with the highest evaluation of himself said he was worth about $1.3 million. The lowest self-worth quotient was about $43,500, the report said. The survey apparently shows that the average Japanese man thinks he's worth more than he was a few

Saudi Arabia, Emirates sign security pact

RIYADH, Feb. 21 (SPA) - Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates signed a security cooperation agreement at the Interior Ministry here Sunday.

The agreement was singed by Interior Minister Prince Naif and UAE Minister of State for Internal Affairs Sheikh Hamoudah ibn

Prince Naif said the agreement is similar to the one signed earlier with Bahrain, adding that officials of the two countries had previously discussed the accord which streamlines cooperation between the interior ministries of the two countries in many fields, mainly in the sphere of security cooperation, exchange of data, training on common borders and handing of criminals.

An identical agreement was to be signed with Qatar Sunday night, said the minister, adding that "we hope to sign two more accords with Oman and Kuwait'. With this, he said, bilateral accords will be completed with all other five states - members of the Gulf Cooperation Council. He added that these agreements will reinforce any comprehensive security accord among the six GCC states. Meanwhile, the minister hoped that the agreements would help in preserving security and stability in the six states, saying "we want nothing but welfare for all ".

Asked about the substitution of the passport by an identity card during the GCC citizens' movement from one member state to another, Prince Naif said "this subject came under discussion and is expected to be placed before the interior ministers of the six during their meeting in Riyadh."

Saleh, Sabah to ponder Yemens' unity

KUWAIT. Feb. 21 (AP) — The president of North Yemen arrived Sunday on the second leg of an Arab tour aimed at elucidating his viewpoint on the proposed merger with South Yemen. Col. Ali Abdullah Saleh, who held talks Saturday in Oman, was received at the airport by Kuwaiti ruler Sheikh Jabar Al-Ahmad Al-Sabah.

The Yemeni leader said his talks 'in Oman and other Arab countries were aimed at "assessing the latest developments and restoring Arab solidarity through a unified visualization." Oman has been accusing South Yemen of plotting with the Soviet Union against the stability of the Gulf region and of engaging in border provocations.

But claims that there is any revival of activities by Communist-supported rebel bands in the Dhofar province, under complete gover-nment control since December 1975, are dismissed as rubbish by Omani authorities. A week-long military maneuver was concluded by Omani forces in Dhofar a few days ago. and reporters who visited the area earlier this month said everything was quiet.

round of the drawnout talks on autonomy for the 1.5 million Palestinians living under Israeli occupation in the Jordan West Bank and Gaza Strip at expert level March 1.

The 41-year-old Washington lawyer visited Ali for more than an hour after arriving here from Israel where he had discussed the autonomy issue with Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin. He said Sunday that his discussions with Ali were very fruitful. "We are in agreement as to the next steps in the autonomy process," he told reporters, without going into details.

Israeli Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir is due in Cairo Monday on a three-day visit to discuss preparations for Israel's final withdrawal from the Sinai peninsula in April. An Israeli embassy spokesman said Shamir would be seeing the Egyptian foreign minister and other senior officials, but no meeting was scheduled with Fairbanks. "The autonomy question will probably be discussed but the emphasis of talks will be on bilateral relations," the spokesman stated.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak is set to make his first trip to Israel next month but an exact date has still to be fixed. Egyptian Prime Minister Fouad Mohieddin Sunday emphasized in a policy statement to the Peo-ple's Assembly (parliament) his country's commitment to go on with its present Middle East policy after Israel hands back the final portion of Sinai April 26.

The statement followed a report by The Washington Post newspaper quoting Haig as expressing fears at recent private meetings with his senior staff that Egypt would break off the peace process once Israel returned the last part of Sinai, occupied in the 1967 Mid-

The autonomy talks are an integral part of the peace process under the 1979 treaty between Israel and Egypt, But negotiations have floundered because of differing interpretations about the form autonomy should take. The Palestinians, who are demanding an independent state, have refused to take part in the talks, arguing that autonomy would amount to the perpetuation of Israeli occupation.

Egypt had asked the U.S. to appoint a special representative in order to help give a boost to the autonomy negotiations. The U.S. has not had a full-time negotiator on the autonomy issue since Sol Linowitz grappled with the problem during the Carter presidency.

Iranians tell U.N. of human rights breach

UNITED NATIONS, Feb. 21 (AP) -A group of Iranians have complained to United Nations officials of human rights violations and has asked for action.

The complaint came Friday as Iranian students demonstrated at the U.N. headquarters with placards charging that 30.000 people were political prisoners in Iran today and that 8,000 had been executed in the last seven months. A senior U.N. official concerned with human rights matters said an Iranian delegation had been received in the human rights liaison office by Mrs. Pilar Santander Downing. chief of the office, and Donald E. Fitzpatr ick, special assistant for political and humanitarian affairs to Undersecretary General William B. Buffin.

BEIRUT, Feb. 21 (Agencies) — The International Red Cross in Geneva has approached the Tehran government with a view to organizing the disposal of more than 3,000 Iranian war: dead, casualties in last week's major Iraqi offensive against the Iranian border town of Bostan, the Iraqi News Agency reported today.

Widening of truce ruled out by Arafat

eration Organization Chairman Yasser Arafat said Sunday he could never accept a broadening of the truce in south Lebanon to include all attacks against Israel as long as the Zionist state occupied Arab lands.

In an emotional speech marking the 13th anniversary of the founding of the PLO faction known as the Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine (DFLP). Arafat appeared to reject reported pressure by Western European nations and U.S. President Ronald Reagan in this regard.

"Let the Western Europeans and Reagan bear me while they talk about a breach of the ceasefire in the Tyasir battle which lasted 24 hours," Arafat said referring to a Jan. 28 raid by a group of commandos into the West Bank after infiltrating from Jordan. Three commondos were captured by Israeli forces who said they were planting land mines.

"I cannot declare a ceasefire so long as there is an occupied Palestinian land and there is no Palestinian leadership which will agree to a ceasefire so long as there is an occupied Palestinian land," said Arafat, drawing cheers from the huge crowd of supporters packed into an auditorium at Arab University in west Beirut.

A military standdown in south Lebanon negotiated by U.S. presidential envoy Philip C. Habib and then U.N. Secretary General Kurt Waldheim halted 15 days of fighting last July which included an Israeli air raid on the Palestinian neighborhood where Araan estimated 300 lives.

"I want to remind them (Israel) that it was not we who asked for the July ceasefire," said Arafat who was wearing a black-and-white checkered Arab headdress and a pistol strapped to his waist. "All we said was that we do not uphold a ceasefire as such but that we respect a decision taken at the Tunis summit (in 1979), not to carry out military operations on Lebanese territory against this occupying force (Israel).

Israeli officials claimed the Palestinian commando raid last month constituted a violation of the July truce agreement and Israel was said by government sources in Tel Aviv to be on the verge of a strike against the commandos earlier this month in retaliation.

Tensions have risen sharply in recent weeks in south Lebanon with both sides accusing each other of ceasefire violations. The PLO charges Israel was massing troops and had held live ammunition maneuvers near

3 Palestinian students held in West Bank

TEL AVIV, Feb. 21 (Agencies) - Widespread protests were reported in the occupied West Bank Sunday in the fifth straight day of anti-Israel demonstrations following the closure of the Bir Zeit University.

The Israeli military command listed disturbances among secondary school students in Nablus, Jericho, Ramallah, El Bireh and Bir Zeit. Three Palestinian youths were arrested in Nablus during demonstrations.

Students in Nablus smashed school windows and furniture and girls in El Bireh, Ramallah and Bir Zeit stoned Israeli military vehicles before being dispersed by troops. Israeli security forces used tear gas in Ramailah Saturday to disperse several hundred demonstrators.

Last Tuesday, the Israeli military authorities ordered the Palestinian Bir Zeit University to close for two months because students beat two Israeli education officials visiting the campus, and since then there have been daily anti-Israel protests around the West

13,000 Turks opt to retire

ANKARA, Feb. 21 (AFP) - Nearly 13,000 Turkish government officials have been accepted for voluntary early retirement and another 1,500 directly retired, officials sources said here Sunday.

The moves followed several earlier purges from public offices in which 101 officials left Turkish radio-and television organization because of leftist views and nearly 10,000 civil servants left ministries and the police force. Most of the latter were purged for being involved in ideological struggles or terrorist actions.

The latest departures were decided by a committee comprising the ministers of state, finance and tourism, who altogether had studied early retirement applications from 100,000 officials who had completed 20 years service.

'Free those without proper charges'

Iran chief justice asks courts to speed up trials

ice, Ayatollah Abdulkarim Ardabili, ordered all courts Sunday to speed up studying the cases of prisoners and to release those without appropriate charges made against them, the official news agency IRNA reported.

IRNA, formerly Pars, said Ardabili issued a circular telling all courts that, "prisoners should not be kept in detention without appropriate charges made against them." The agency quoting the justice department announcement, said, "in an effort to speed up the cases of prisoners and in compliance with the order of Ayatollah Khomeini dated Feb. 11, the courts should speedily and carefuly study all the cases of those detained."

Ayatollah Khomein's Iran, which has been faced with a seven-month-old guerrilla war by underground opposition groups, claims to have no more than 4,000 political prisoners. But the leader of the main opposition group, the Mujahedeen Khalq guerrilla organization, says 30,000 political prisoners are at present serving sentences in Iranian Jails. Iran's prosecutor Gen. Hojatoleslam Hossein Tabrizi, said Saturday that between 2,000 to 3,000 prisoners including some with political charges, will be free by March 21, the Iranian new year. Meanwhile, the staterun Tehran radio said Sunday the Czechoslovakian minister for foreign trade who arrived in Tehran last Friday has met with high ranking Iranian economic and political officials, including President Ali Khamenei.

In an interview with Tehran radio, the minister said his talks with Iranian official focused on oil and petrochemical industries. He said his country could be a "good purchaser of Iranian crude oil," and believed Iran could be a "good buyer of Czech petrochemical supplies and parts."

French widow, 2 sons given life term by Libya for spying

Feb. 21 (AFP) - A French widow and her two sons have been imprisoned for life by a Libyan court for alleged spying, the French consul in Tripoli said Sunday.

The consul, contacted by telephone, said he was "floored" by the sentence on Denise Dupont, 58, and sons Alain, 25 and Jean-Claude, 21, who had already spent 22 months in a Libyan jail. The consul said that an immediate appeal for clemency would be lodged with the Libyan authorities through diplomatic channels.

Cheysson arrives in Iragi capital

BEIRUT, Feb. 21 (R) - French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson arrived in Baghdad Sunday on a two-day official visit to Iraq, the official Iraqi News Agency reported. It said Cheysson, who arrived from Abu Dhabi, would have talks with Iraqi Foreign Minister Saadoun Hammadi.

The rebuilding of a French nuclear research center destroyed during an Israeli air attack last year is expected to be discussed during Cheysson's visit. During his visit to the United Arab Emirates, he met UAE president, Sheikh Zaid Bin Sultan Al-Nahayan, and other leaders.

the period the three had already spent in Jail, the consul said. For this reason, the consulate had already booked tickets for the Duponts to fly home, the consul said. It is still unclear what the family were doing in Libya when they were arrested in April 1980 on charges of "spying for American imperialism and Zionism." Mrs. Dupont, who had been recently widowed, had gone to Algeria in 1979 with her sons, though neighbors in their home town near here described the family as "primitive" and said they bad problems even catching a local bus.

In January 1980, the trio entered Libya on three-month tourist visas and were arrested in April after these expired. Consulate representatives — implicitly confirming the verdict of friends here that the family was mentally incapable of working for any foreign power - said that their physical and mental state had since deteriorated. Mrs. Dupont and her eldest son were now in a psychiatric hospital, they said.

Their trial, postponed a dozen times without explanation, finally took place in camera Jan. 21. The Libyan press never reported the case and the verdict was delivered Sunday morning to a half-empty courtroom. In the Dupont's home town of Haulchin a defense committee has been set up and local mayors said Sunday they were calling for a demonstration outside the Libyan embassy in Paris.

Fighting kills 24 in Lebanon

BEIRUT, FEB. 21 (Agencies) - Heavy street fighting was resumed in the northern Lebanese city of Tripoli Sunday for the third consecutive day after an early morning ceasefire broke down. Police sources said an estimated 24 persons have been killed and more than 40 wounded. Beirut state radio said the situation in Tripoli, the country's second largest city, 80 kms north of Beirut, deteriorated in the afternoon despite efforts by a security committee to disarm the combatants. It said several types of weapons were used in the fighting and members of the security committee who attempted to enter Tripoli came under fire.

The fighting pitted units of the Syrian peacekeeping forces in Lebanon and the pro-Syrian Arab Democratic Front against two nationalist militias known as the Oct. 24 Organization and the Muslim Popular Resistance Front. It was not clear what triggered the fierce battles which began Friday.

Police sources Saturday said the combatants were using heavy artillery and rocket launchers in addition to machine guns and rocket-propelled grenades in the fighting which spread to all parts of the coastal city.

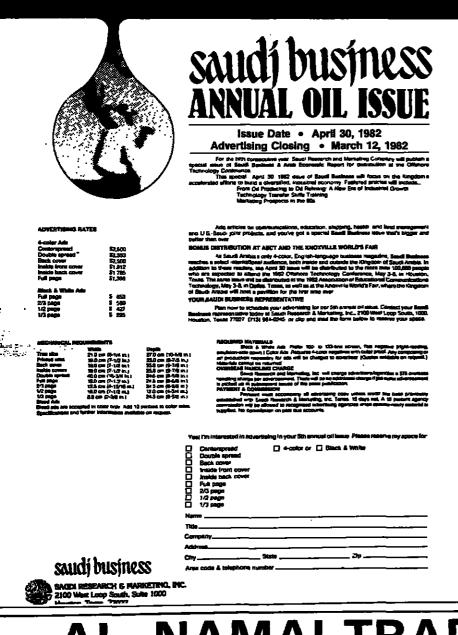

It was not clear how Syrian peacekeeping forces became involved in the showdown but Lebanese state television Saturday said Syrian positions had come under fire from militia positions forcing a retaliation.

The ceasefire, the second in 24 hours, ended 48 hours of fierce fighting in the port city which is located about 30 kms from the Syrian border. Reports from Tripoli said the situation deteriorated early Sunday when shots were fired at representatives of the conciliation committee as they tried to move into neighborhood strongholds of the belligerents. Firing went on for about two hours after which the security guards made further attempts to move in. When shooting resumed, reports said the guards fired back.

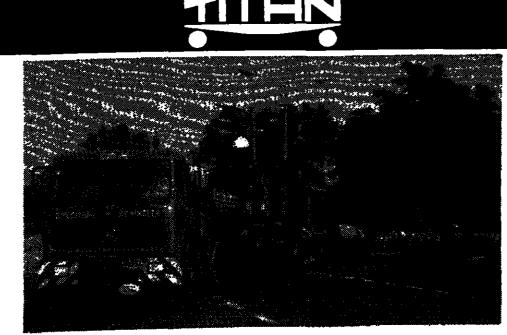

According to correspondents, none of the belligerents are satisfied with the ceasefire which provides for the withdrawal of armed elements from the city and the creation of mixed patrols to enforce ceasefire terms.

Popular resistance militiamen control slum areas clustered along the Abu Ali River which divides the old city of Tripoli. Gunmen in jeans and green flak jackets, their pockets crammed with spare amunition magazines, have set up machine gun positions on the roofs of two and three-storey concrete apartment blocks.

The Arab Democratic Party is entrenched in districts on a hill overlooking their opponents. The past week's violence in Tripoli, 70 kms north of Beirut, is the worst in the city since early December, when a car bomb killed or wounded about 50 persons.

CAMBODIAN CRISIS

Despite all the changes, most of them catastrophic, which have befallen Cambodia, despite the varieties of regimes it has seen, the country as a whole still looks to Prince Sihanouk as its abiding symbol as well as its best hope for emerging intact from the present struggle over it by the two great Communist powers, the Soviet Union

Prince Sihanouk's regime was originally accused by the right of being too left wing. But when the right deposed him, it soon was destroyed by the power of the Khmer Rouge, who instituted a regime unparalleled in ferocity. These soon were also driven from power, by the invading Vietnamese who were incited by the Soviet Union. The Vietnamese instilled a subservient regime in the country, while the Khmer Rouge kept on fighting in the countryside, aided by the Chinese.

Throughout this time, the majority of the Cambodians wanted nothing more than the return of Prince Sihanouk. Numerous calls were issued to him to return and lead the fight for the country's liberation. But he has declared that he will return only if the various factions opposing the Vietnamese presence would unite. His invitation to such a wide front was extended even to the blood bespattered Khmer Rouge.

The task of uniting the opposition to the Vietnamese is however proving very difficult. The ideological and political differences among the opposition groups have been for a long time deepened and embittered by their various external affiliations. The Soviet Union has also been employing its considerable power in the cause of thwarting such effort.

Prince Sihanouk has not yet abandoned his attempt. And he still insists that his return has to mark the end of his country's suffering, rather than be the cause for more bloodshed.

Saudi Arabian press review

The emergency meeting of the Arab interior ministers to ratify the basic statute of their council and the statement in which U.S. Foreign Secretary Alexander Haig expressed his deep concern that Egypt might one day rejoin in the Arab fold, figured for editorial comments in Sunday's newspap-

On the Arab interior conference, due to open in Riyadh Monday, Al Jazirah said the meeting comes as a practical step toward enhancing Arab security cooperation and capabilities particularly in such a crucial time witnessed by the Arab world.

"It will also be a big stride toward healing Arab differences and achieving a collective Arab front capable of facing the challenges and intrigues engineered by the Zionist enemy and foreign powers against the Arab nation, the paper said.

Okaz said further cooperation between the Arabs in the security field will take a final and advanced shape by the interior ministers' ratification of the basic statute of their council.

Al Riyadh underlined that the establishment of a strong Arab security cooperation is an necessity since the Arab world has become the target of Zionist and imperialist intrigues. The establishment of strong Arab security cooperation between the Arab states is vital to preserve Arab sovereignty, stability and wealth.

Commenting on the remarks by Haig, in which he expressed his fears that Egypt one day would return to Arab fold, Al Madinah wondered if Egypt one day was one of the American states taken by the Arabs. The paper urged the gyptian leadership to react on Haig's remarks and pessimism and asked Cairo to give the American officials a decisive reply that can turn his fears into tears.

Egypt has been created to be an Arab state and will remain so those of Camp David. (SPA)

TV university planned by palestinians

By Nigel Willmott

As part of its program to establish itself as the representative of all Palestinians the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) is to set up its own

The plan is to follow the example of Britain and Japan with a television "open university" as part of an expansion of its social and economic programs, which includes a mass literacy campaign and the computerization of its welfare payment system.

The university project, backed by a UNESCO feasibility study, will be run by the PLO's education department, which will establish its own television and audiovisual production unit. It will probably use the Syrian television service, which can be picked up in parts of neighboring Jordan and Lebanon. with back-up from local audiovisual centers.

A loan and technical assistance are being provided by the Arab Fund for Economic and Social Development in Kuwait, of which the PLO is a full member.

Palestinians have traditionally placed high value on education as a way of escaping the conditions of their exile. Palestinian scholars estimate that Palestinians, about 2.5 percent of the Arab world's population, provide about 10 percent of its graduate manpower. Each year an estimated 70,000 Palestinians are working as students, a ratio of about 11 per thousand of population; the British figure is around 8 per 1,000.

However, the PLO has been increasingly concerned that it has no say in the curriculum of courses followed by Palestinian students, mostly in the Arab countries. The university will give it the chance to create a more Palestinian-oriented higher

Social and economic programs which bolster national consciousness and self-development have grown as the PLO has concentrated more and more on the diplomatic rather than military struggle.

Less than 20 percent of the PLO's estimated $300 million budget, raised by donations from Arab states and individuals and a tax on Palestinians working in the Gulf countries, goes on military spending. But the PLO's own force, the Palestinian Liberation Army, is small and the component groups within the organization, of which Fateh is the largest, keep control of their own forces.

The PLO's exchequer, the Palestine National Fund, is professionally run with computerized accounts in Damascus, and supplies audited figures to the Palestine National Congress, which has to approve the budget like a national parliament.

An attempt to provide an accurate demographic picture of the Palestinian people is being made by the PLO's Bureau of Statistics, now the nucleus of a separate Economic Department after being hived off last May from the PNF.

The Economic Commission for West Asia, a regional U.N. body, has been negotiating with a Beirut economic consultancy to carry out a study of the economic and social conditions of Palestinians throughout the world. The go-ahead is expected to be given at ECWA's next meeting in April.

The PLO's Bureau of Statistics is currently the other main user of the PNF's computer, but there will soon be a third. The system is to undergo a $200,000 upgrade to automate the welfare payments to Palestinian martyrs — fighters injured or killed in battle - and their dependants.

The aim is to link the system with local offices of the Department for Social Affairs in Syria and Lebanon. Around 30,000 individuals receive average payment of around $160 a month, helping to supp ort an estimated 150,000 Palestinians.

European anxieties have been sharpened by Reagan's 1983 budget, which provides for a $91.5 billion

> U.S. government borrowing, say the Europeans, will keep interest rates high, forcing European banks to raise their own levels in an effort to stem the outflow of investment money. Belgian Prime Minister Wilfried Martens said after a meeting with Reagan that Western economies "are going through very difficult times and our solidarity is being put to the test." Martens hurried to Washington to convey the > collective feelings of the 10 nations of the European Economic Community only six weeks after taking over the rotating EEC presidency. He was preceded by Luxembourg Foreign Minister Colette Flesch and followed by West German Economics Minister Otto Lambsdorff, both on similar missions. The interest rates row is almost certain to be a key subject when Reagan makes his first visit to Europe as president in June. He will attend a seven-nation Western economic summit in Paris and a meeting of the 15-nation NATO alliance in Bonn.

Diplomats expect a showdown also over U.S. efforts to impose sharp curbs on trade with the Soviet Union following the imposition of martial law in Poland. Most European governments are opposed to giving up lucrative contracts with Moscow at a time when unemployment has soared close to the 11 million mark in the EEC countries. "For my taste, there is too much talk about so-called strategic questions in the military and political field, and too little talk and too little cooperation in the economic field," Schmidt said.

U.S.-European tensions will be discussed in meelor and French President François Mitterrand in Paris and between Mitterrand and Italian Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini in Rome. All three countries have rejected U.S. requests that they should back out of a $10 billion pipeline project to carry Soviet natural gas to Western Europe. "Others can squawk as much as they like, it will not be changed," Schmidt said last week.

U.S. officials argue that economic pressure against Moscow will force the Soviet government to relax its policies on Poland, arms control and other issues. But many Europeans argue the other way. Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo, also on a visit to Washington last week, said that in Europe" it is felt that economic ties with the West could moderate Moscow's behaviour." Schmidt says "Europeans are a little hesitant about tampering with trade." There has been little enthusiasm in Western Europe for joint Western sanctions over Poland. The chancellor, in his interview with The Guar - dian, commented: "It's easy for Americans to talk about trade because they haven't much trade, either with the Soviet Union or with the world at large."

Schmidt also argued for continuing a political dialogue with Moscow despite the military crackdown in Poland. The U.S. wants to limit contacts for the timebeing mainly to the missile talks in Geneva. "I don't see that a speechless confrontation would serve either Western purposes or Polish purposes or the purpose of peace," Schmidt said.

Foreign ministers Hans-Dietrich Genscher of West Germany and Claude Cheysson of France, meeting in Bonn, said they attached "great importance to cooperation with the U.S. and creating better mutual understanding between Americans and Europeans in view of the problems of today." Dan-

The justice ministry plans to replace these 'kangaroo courts' with a two-tiered system of primary courts. About 2,000 village courts of the kind which considered the Munson case are to be set up. Presiding officers at the village courts, the Makuru Dare, are chosen from the community and receive no legal training. Their jurisdiction is limited to civil cases where the claim does not exceed $250 - a fact apparently forgotten by the official in Norton who awarded damages agreed by Munson of $700.

The farmer intends to appeal against the order and will take his case to a community court, the next stage up in the system, which are presided over by Vatongi - officers with no limit in civil jurisdiction and who may also try minor cases of theft and assault and impose fines of up to $50. So far 40 Vatongi have been produced at six-week training courses and another 40 are undergoing instruction.

Munson is not happy with the new system - "I, am sure it would have been more orderly if it had been conducted by a chief," he said afterward. But if he is still displeased with the ruling at the next level he can take the case to a magistrates' court and, in theory at least, the case could go all the way to the court of appeal. (ONS) ish Prime Minister Anker Joergensen surprised NATO partners two weeks ago with a sharp public criticism of the U.S. He said Trans-Atlantic cooperation was being undermined by Reagan administration policies on El Salvador and Poland.

U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig has said the U.S. is "appalled" by a decision by French bankers to lend the Soviet Union $1 billion to help build the projected gas line. He has asked Undersecretary of State James Buckley to visit West European capitals in hopes of coordinating future policy on credits for Communist countries.

U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger says the propping-up of Soviet Bloc economies by Western loans help Moscow divert other funds to build weapons aimed against the West. Both sides acknowledge that a row over East-West trade would be divisive for the NATO partnership. U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Robert Hormats warned last week there was "no point...in making this pipeline issue an issue which is going to lead to a crack in the alliance at a time when alliance unity is essential to our strategy of putting maximum pressure on the Soviet Union and Poland."

With more than 2,000 persons gathered around on a football pitch, they heard the man describe how his wife's adultery with the farmer - an apparently casual affair in a plantation - had affected his standing in the community which required redress. The system came into effect almost a year ago under the Customary Law Bill, which gave legal status to the tribal framework for matters relating to land, property, marriage and succession. The Munson case was the first in which a white has been arraigned on a sexual matter although a number of whites have previously been ordered to pay damages for owning dogs which attacked blacks.

African custom is a vital part of the fabric of rural life where 60 percent of Zimbabwe's population lives. Arbitration in, for example, a witchcraft case in which a family have been accused of putting a spell on others in the village, was in the past left to chiefs and white district commissioners. Other cases might involve disputes over land or livestock. Because chiefs often assessed cases involving their relatives, and because litigants had to pay a fee for a hearing, the system was open to abuse.

The place of tribal chiefs as adjudicators has been taken largely by political elements installed by the guerrilla forces during the independence war. At first, their objective was to locate and try people suspected of giving information to the security forces, but since the ceasefire they have continued to dispense rough justice in their rural communities.

'Waste exchange' links have's with have not's to save the environment

BONN (R) — Fifty thousand light bulbs. 15 tons of used cooking oil, worn-out tires and a wig-maker's left over Chinese hair. To many people this is just so much rubbish.

But to Franziska Haenert of West Germany's Industry and Trade Association (DIHT) this and other factory waste is often raw materials in the wrong place."

In 1974, Dr. Haenert and the DIHT began trying to find homes for waste products from factories, in much the same way that marriage agencies try to match up couples.

Since then DIHT, which was first inspired by a similar plan in Austria, has extended the idea to cover other countries in Western Eur-

This month's list of factory waste has been published in French, Italian and German and circulated to companies and chambers of commerce in France and Italy, as well as West Germany, Austria and the Netherlands, which were already served.

Dr. Haenert describes the coordinating bureau as a "waste exchange," using a term more commonly associated with hectic trading in stocks and shares.

Of course it isn't an exchange in the normal sense of the word, and we don't deal in waste materials as legally defined," she says.

"But 'waste exchange' is a much better term than 'Produktionsrueckstandsvermittlung' (brokerage of production residues)," Dr. Haenert, who masterminded the West

German exchange, has acted as consultant for similar institutions in Italy and Canada and is now directing the new European exch-For her, there are commercial as well as environmental reasons for a marketplace where firms can advertise both needs and surplus materials. Why burn hundreds of old rubber tires and despoil the countryside when another businessman can add them to his cement? she asks.

Why jettison cooking-fat from fast-food restaurants if a soap-maker will take it away for nothing or even pay for the privilege? she

Each of the 69 chambers of commerce in West Germany collects information from its member companies and passes it to Dr. Haenert's office in Bonn.

The various products, mainly chemicals, are coded, described and listed. Then they are circulated free of charge to large companies and local trade associations.

Past offers include a wig-maker's left over Chinese hair, and one company is currently trying to market 50,000 used light-bulbs after modernizing its factory.

People see items they want or items they can supply and contact the advertiser through their local chamber of commerce, which acts as an unpaid broker.

Some 16,500 offers of waste and more than 6,000 notices of demand were published in the German exchange between 1974 and the end of 1981. More than one in four offers and one in three demands received a successful reply.

The DIHT has no record of its clients' financial arrangements, but Dr. Haenert says their profits and savings, let alone the benefit to the environment, must be measured in "millions of dollars."

The new European Exchange, complete with a tri-lingual dictionary of terms, has a mailing readership of 900, which is vastly increase by reprintings in local chamber bull-

But as with marriage agencies, the success of the waste exchange is measured by the number of customers it loses. When one person finds a suitable partner, he signs a contract and withdraws from the market.

The number of industrial "lonely hearts" in the columns of the German exchange has dropped from a monthly peak of 700 to around only 100. "We sometimes feel surprised it is still running," Dr. Haenert says.

But industry's needs and by-products are always changing. Waste paper, once in demand for recycling, now finds scarcely a buyer. Old car tires, once an environmental nuisance, are now snapped up eagerly.

And, as Dr. Haenert adds, "people are always discovering new kinds of waste to

Swedish center monitors underground explosions

HAGFORS, Sweden, (AP) - From an old-fashioned cottage deep in a Swedish forest the Swedish Defense Research Agency keeps a watchful eye on Western and Communist underground nuclear explosions.

The Hagfors observatory, situated in midwest Sweden near the Norwegian border, looks no different than any other 19th century cottage in the area.

But the unfenced, unguarded house is stuffed with multimillion-dollar electronic equi-, pment that can pinpoint an earthquake or underground nuclear blast within a radius of 10,000 kilometers (6,000 miles).

The observatory, set up under provisions of Swedish disarmament negotiations and the Geneva disarmament talks, recorded nuclear blasts from 1945 to early February. But the chief officer of the observatory says now conditions are such that the number of nuclear blasts probably is higher.

Sweden has long advocated a total ban on nuclear blasts. The Swedish government has sought to learn whether seismological instruments could be employed as a control mecbanism to monitor and supervise such explosions around the world. To keep track of all such explosions around the world, at least 50 more recording stations are needed, according to the FOA.

The observatory is manned by a crew of three. It also controls three unmanned recording stations. The FOA also engages about 20 researchers and technicians at its headquarters in Stockholm.

The United States tops the agency's records, having set off 829 nuclear explosions since the mid-40s. The Soviets are runnersup at 471, but an agency spokesman pointed out that these figures also include a number of civlian-related charges for peaceful purpo-

Singapore lives off the sea, mussel farming shows promise

SINGAPORE (Depthnews) - For an intemational port which boasts of beating Rotterdam as the world's busiest in 1981, this island state is indeed living off its surrounding seas, from the solitary fisherman out at dusk to the supertankers docking in the island

Now, Singapore is setting its sights on sea farming.And like its sprawling new airport, huge shopping blocks, towering apartments, and the intensity of its industrial development, Singapore has big plans.

Take mussel shells. Mussels are a good source of protein and compare favorably with beef, pork, mutton, chicken and eggs. In fact, its protein content is comparable with that of shrimp and soft-finned fishes like herring.

It is fairly rich in nine essential amino acids, especially arginine, leucine, and lysine. And its shell contains about 90 percent calcium, a good source of feed for chicken layers.

Compared with cockle, Anadara granosa, brown mussel, (Modiolus, species found in mud), and clam, Meretrix meretrix, green mussel has the highest meat content.

No wonder then that Singapore, where fish is about 30 percent of the total animal protein intake, is encouraging commercial farms to produce the green-shelled mussel mytilus viridis, a local delicacy.

Fish consumption of 30 kilos per person per year in Singapore is one of the highest in Southeast Asia. But unlike poultry and eggs. Singapore is not self-sufficient in fish. Local fishermen harvest only 25 percent of the 60,000-65,000 tons of fresh fish this island consumes annually. Coastal fishermen, using traditional kelongs (fishpens), fish pots and nets, used to bring in large catches in the late '50s. Huge land reclamation and industrialization plans in the last two decades have caused the stagnation of offshore catches by local fishing vessels since 1971, while inshore catches have steadily declined. Mussel is a popular dish in most Asian countries, and is a multi-million dollar industry in some European countries and in North America. It is no stranger in Singapore where it is locally known as kupang, chai- luan or tam-choy, served either fresh, dried or smoked - anywhere from post restaurants to open-air food stalls.

Local mussel production comes from fishermen who harvest them from the nibongs (poles) of kelongs during low tide. The mussels are cooked in a metal drum, shucked by hand, and sauted on a metal plate. They are then sun-dried and sold as dried mussels.

Mussels, attached in clusters to rocks and fishing stakes, abound in the Johore Straits, a waterway separating the island republic from peninsular Malaysia less than ten minutes away by bridge. Sprinkling the Straits with fish farms is thus attractive to land-starved

Early last year, the Primary Production Department (PPD) set aside 30 hectares off Pulau Unbin and Serangoon for fish and mussel farming. There are three areas in the Straits from which spats (or baby mussels) can be collected. Mussel production is also possible the year round.

Government researchers have been able to raise mussels on a commercial scale in an experimental fish farm near PPD's fisheries complex at Changi. On a production rate of LION BROOD: All types of wild animals are encouraged in Kenya's reserves. When a brood like this attacks farm animals, however, can the native really be blamed for defending his livelihood?

MUSSEL FARMER: Singapore is promoting intensive fish and mussel farming in order help encourage self-sufficiency. Presently, local fishermen harvest only 25 percent of the 60,000 to 65,000 tons of fresh fish this island consumers annually. Here a fisherman lifts a rope which is covered with mussels. 120 kilos per square meter in six months, a yearly production of 2,400 tons is possible from a hectare of mussel farm

Singapore is promoting half-hectare farms to encourage intensive fish and mussel farming. For a S$500 ($245) yearly license fee and a deposit of S$5,000 ($2,450), a fisherman can have a chance of producing 17 tons of fish or 54 tons of mussels each year for the first two years of operation.

"With experience, farmers can double production by the fourth year," says Leslie Cheong, a senior officer with PPD's aquaculture unit. "The level of mussel culture research here is sufficiently advanced for largescale development to be implemented in the near future. Mussei as a protein-rich resource has a great development potential in Southe-

For a start, research efforts are directed at determining the carrying capacities of the mussel grounds identified. This will enable fisheries officials to formulate guidelines on the size and distribution of mussel farms. Today, there are over 40 private fish farms in the Strait, three of them devoted solely to mussel culture.

One amazing feature of the mussel is its ability to clean itself. Mussels normally filter microscopic bits and pieces that float in the water, from nutrients to oil pollutants. But placed in clean water, they are also able to cleanse themselves in a process called depuration, an important safety device in the sale of fresh mussels which are sometimes eaten raw or semi-cooked.

Investigations are being made on the effectiveness of chlorine and ultra-violet radiation as sterilizing agents. Preliminary results show that ultra-violet is a more practical method, leaving no residue in the seawater after treatment. While regular monitoring of diseasecarrying organisms and heavy metal pollutants in local mussel meat shows that they pass minimum public health requirements, facilities for depurating mussels on a pilot-scale are being set-up.

A major constraint to large-scale mussel development is in the handling of large quantities of fresh musels with their shells on. But, like in Europe, the problem can be solved through mechanization. Holland, for instance, processes its mussels at a rate of eight tons per hour up to the stage (declusterer) where mussel clumps are separated into individual shells. Traditional methods here see eight persons handling one ton in a five-hour day just for washing and cleaning the shells.

The PPD is looking into the establishment of pre-processing facilities including a declusterer, a debearder (for removing the byssal threads form the shells), and a desheller (for shucking or dislodging the meat from the

A $$4,000 ($1,960) raw processor has aiready been developed. It is able to scrape the mussels from their culture rope, separate small mussels and decluster and wash the mussels - all at the same time, up to one ton per hour. A debearder is also being developed, but the sharp edges of local mussels (European mussels are round-edged) jam themselves between rollers and about 30 percent get crushed.

Researchers are now studying the deshelling process, concentrating on the right amount of temperature and time that it takes for local mussel meat to separate from the shell when cooked

Wild animals in Kenya now pay their own way

By Alastair Matheson

NAIROBI (LOS) — When Olochino ole Mbayo, a young Masai Warrior, thrust his 10ft spear into the belly of a lioness, he was not concerned with how much he would make from selling the highly prized skin.

His motive was a simple one. The lioness had just killed two of his valuable cows and was already attacking a third, Mbayo felt he had every right to kill. His own life was at stake too. In the fight, he was badly mauled about the chest. Yet, when the scars had healed, he was brought before Nairobi Mag-istrate's Court and accused of killing a prot-ected animal in Amboseli National Park without a hunter's license.

Mbayo frankly admitted his guilt to Chief Magistrate Fidahussein Abdullah, adding with more than a touch of pride that he had killed the lioness single-handed.

In older days, before the coming of the white man, he would probably have been tried by a group of Masai elders who would have perhaps concluded that it was the lioness who was hunting without a license and deservedly met her fate.

Well versed in traditional African law, as well as the legal code which kenya borrowed from the British, the magistrate accepted Mbayo's plea of guilty but discharged him "having regard to the circumstances of

Such prosecutions are by no means unique in modern Kenya. They typify the dilemma facing more and more Africans throughout this continent when they come face to face with wild animals who dispute mankind's right to graze livestock or to cultivate

Until a few years ago, Amboseli National Park was a traditional grazing ground for the Masai, but the tribe managed to share the park's natural resources with the animals until their cattle herds multiplied so much that the landscape turned into desert each dry season.

Like their fellow tribesmen across the border in Tanzania who have long regarded the Ngorongoro game reserve as their traditional land, the Masai of Amboseli have had to make way for the wild animals which bring free-spending tourists to the country.

The discharge given to Mbayo has incensed a number of the hard-core conservationists in Kenya. Veteran safari operator Sid Downey, pleading for tougher measures against those killing wild animals, has pointed out that the value of a lion in Amboseli today is $515,000 a year. The calculation is based on the dwindling number of lions in the park and the amount of money spent by tourists coming to visit them

The issue of man versus wild beast has led to a heated national dispute, especially in the more fertile areas to the north and west of Mount Kenya, where African peasant farmers have joined the remaining white settlers in an effort to keep wild animals from ruining their crops.

Every year now the government is paying out large sums in compensation to farmers whose land has been despoiled by elephant, buffalo and antelope. Expensive wire fencing, electrified from solar cells, is proving the most effective deterrent, replacing deep ditches, bamboo barricades and ordinary wire fencing which no longer keep the animals away from crops.

With Kenya's human population growing at a faster rate than that of any other country in the world (at just under 4 percent a year), political pressure has become acute; more and more land is needed for food production.

"Translocation" of wild animals to remoter or drier areas where they will not compete with people has been tried for many years, and with some success. But the time has come when Kenya sees little possibility of extending its existing 18 parks and reser-

Conservationists accept that only within these sanctuaries will it be possible to preserve wildlife in the future. Outside the reserves, wild animals are doomed to extinction. A recent study, financed by the World Bank, into the future of Kenya's "big ones" very large herbivores such as elephant, buffalo, rhino and hippo which need lots of space to breed and graze — concluded that the only way they will be allowed to survive will be if they "earn their keep."

In other words local people will have to be taught to love the animals that ruin their livelihood, and sometimes maim or kill a relative. Wild animals will have to be seen as paying their way in terms of the money they bring in from tourism, and the job opportunities tourism creates. Already in several areas, including Amboseli, a large sum is paid to the Masai from park fees, Photographic permits and other wildlife money-makers. But this is, at best, only a palliative and the World Bank study recommends that the "social costs" in keeping land idle for wild animals should be carefully watched. When the bill rises beyond a point that Kenya's economy can stand, the wealthier countries will have to pay a much bigger share towards what many in Africa regard as a

Power station effluent is put to use

NAGPUR (PTI) - Effluents from the thermal power stations can be a good and convenient source of the widely-used calcium carbonate and magnesium oxide, says professor S.P. Sangal of the Laxminarayana Institute of Technology, Nagpur. The recovery of these chemicals from the thermal power station effluents will, according to him also reduce the extent of pollution from power sta-

Sangal says that due to the large amounts of sodium chloride and magnesium chloride present in the waste of the power stations, in some cases, wells in the neighborhood of some power stations turned saline. These chemicals are collected during the water softening and demineralization process of the water required for use in boilers. A 500 MW thermal power plant will discharge about 17,000 to 20,000 tons of waste water containing these chemicals. At present, no power station in India recovers these chemicals from the effluents.

In a system proposed by Sangal, by a series of treatments the two chemicals, magnesium oxide and calcium carbonate, can be recovered in a purified form, with only about 1.5 percent of impurities. The water coming out after the extraction of these chemicals will be rich in sodium chloride. Hence, after evaporation, by the waste heat of the flue gases of the power stations, this water can be concentrated for use in the power plant itself. The proposed plan will be economically viable, according to Sangal, as the waste heat from the plant can be used for various operations in the recovery stages and because over 98 percent purity of products obtained will bring higher prices in the market for calcium carbonate and magnesium oxide.

Besides the thermal power stations, the system suggested by Sangal can be used to treat waste waters required for boiler operations in any large chemical, metallurgical and other plants.

Can food cues eliminate food queues

More than a billion people, according to newspaper reports, go to bed without food every night. Not that they are voluntary abstainers: they just can't get any food. Hunger is the biggest problem faced by the poor developing countries. Every year the number of the undernourished people increases. The spectre of hunger is casting a long, ominous shadow over the future of mankind, giving rise to the darkest predictions about a global of the West should be beset with an entirely different and opposite problem i.e. obesity! Research is constantly conducted there to combat the problem of overeating. Such research may indirectly help solve the problems of the Third World. Teams of distinguished scientists, working independently in America and Europe have arrived at similar conclusions which have far reaching consequences for the future of mankind. (Though the purported aim of the research is to benefit only a minimal part of the world population — the obese.)

These scientists have conclusively proved that food cues or incentives in the environment of fat persons will aggravate their problem of obesity. That means if you are trying to reduce and the aromas of your favorite dishes reach you, or if you think of food most of the time, you'll keep on gaining weight. In other words, with food cues there is no need for food queues! There in the nutshell, you have the solution for the greatest problem faced by humanity throughout the course of its long and chequered history. It would be tragic

STOP KILLING YOURSELF

By Peter J. Steincrohn M.D., F.A.C.P.

Dear Dr. Steincrohn: I wish you'd write another column on the dangers of tension. My husband is killing himself by living at high pitch. — Mrs. F.

Dear Mrs. F.: Tension makes the fat get fatter. Tension raises blood pressure. Tension raises the level of blood lipids (fats). Tension causes diabetics to spill more sugar. Tension makes smokers smoke more. It also threatens the arteries of brain and kidneys as well as those of the heart.

Without question, Mr. F., tension has a cumulative effect. After years of unnatural stress our arteries weaken.

Learning how to live the relaxed way (learning how to carry the load of daily existence) is, in my opinion, the most essential and effective antidote for preventing a heart attack.

Therefore, for years I've been advising high pressure business and professional people to learn how to "unstress" themselves. Mainly, by not trying to squeeze 28 hours of living into 24. It's not easy to slow up, I admit. But your arteries will appreciate it,

Mr. F. I suggest you listen to your wife, reread these tips and take personal inventory.

Dear Doctors: I saw a doctor several months ago for what he diagnosed as a frozen shoulder. I can hardly brush my hair because of the excruciating pain. If I happen to move it in a certain position I am in tears for several seconds. I turn and twist all night with this agonizing pain. I am worn out when morning comes. I have tried everything but the shoulder has a burning, ice cold feeling most of the time. I wrap it in a wool baby blanket every night, The exercise hurts so badly I can't take it. I try because I'm afraid I'm losing the use of this shoulder and suffering this pain the rest of my

The doctor advised injections when I saw him months ago but I refused because I hate needless. I'm 58 years old. Can you make any suggestions that might help? - Mrs. J.

Dear Mrs. J.: We can only guess that your problem is bursitis. Why and how it began we don't know. But we presume that you put off doing anything for the original pain because you thought it would go away by itself. Sometimes it does, sometimes it doesn't.

When pain persists the patient usually limits motion in the affected joint. And the more motion is limited, the more likely will restrictions produce stiffness and decreased mobility. At last comes what is termed the "frozen joint."

Your experience will help other patients with beginning symptoms. They will remember that the longer joint motion is restricted the more likely will any movement cause intense pain. If joint pain does not disappear within a week so by use of heat aspirin and mild exercise, the patient should ask for medical help. This will likely include the needle so many patients abhor. But the cortisone-like injections into the joint are very effective. Exercises and other physical therapy also help. Early treatment will usually prevent frozen joint complications. Our advice. Mrs. J.. is that it's about time that you visit your doctor again. He will institute the necessary treatment to unfreeze your joint. The procedure may take time and be painful, but anything's better than what you have been going through the past few months.

MEDICALETTES (Replies to and from readers)

Dear Dr. Steincrohn: Our orthopedist doesn't believe in keeping an injured leg or arm in casts too long. He believes in early motion. Does this make sense? - Mrs. L.

Dear Mrs. L.: Doctors are beginning to realize the importance of early mobility. Motion is important in healing joints.

This may explain the popularity of rocking chairs among the elderly with arthritis - rocking eases some pain and stiffness of joints. Dr. Robert B. Salter, professor of orthopedic surgery, University of Toronto, Canada, makes this interesting observation: the lowest incidence of degenerative arthritis is found in costal vetebral joints which move continuously with each breath. So you see, your doctor

For Mr. P.: Your recent symptoms of sweating., palpitation intense hunger, tremor of the hands and unsteadiness suggest that these attacks may have been due to hypoglycemia.

This condition is found in diabetic patients who take too large doses of insulin, who have delayed or missed means, or engage in prolonged or unusual exercise. Better report your symptoms to your indeed, if man, were to be destroyed, merely because he failed to provide himself with a morsel of bread. But thanks to the findings of these scientists, man has found a way out of an almost certain catastrophe.

For Mrs. T.: Arthrodesis "freezes" a joint so it doesn't move. It gives stability to such joints as ankles and hips.

In the true and noble traditions of science. these experts have been too modest. They have been quite content to put their findings before the public in the non-emotional. matter-of-fact language of science. The implications of this are tremendous for the future. All the advances made in the fields of space. electronics or computers have yet to feed a hungry man.

In the light of this research one feels sure that the governments around the world will take immediate steps to apply these findings. No more time, effort or money will be wasted in trying to produce food through the traditional methods. International and intranational tensions become meaningless when you realize that feeding the hungry millions presents no difficulty at all. (That this is possible to do, rest assured. The yogis of the past, perhaps of present too, are reputed to have survived for years without eating. They could "think food".) It requires only a slight modification of the attitudes. Though it is true, that man changes but slowly, but the hope is that this tremendous idea will take a firm root in the human consciousness because the entire human future is at stake.

That this is not only possible to do, but will be done definitely in the future when man will not perish a victim of his own follies.

Time: 2282 A.D. Place: somewhere on the earth.

Report: From a time traveler.

It is strange to come to a place as it will be. Healthy, smiling faces greeted me. In acknowledgement I told them that I could have been the great — great-grandfather of some of them. This put them at ease. One very fine young man, the picture of health, who might as well have been my great-grandson (I had neither the time nor the means to establish this) thrust a picture of a glass full of fresh. sizzling beverage in my hand. But as I had taken some refreshments just then. I politely declined the offer.

Great stress is laid upon developing controlled thinking of food. Students are trained to form visual images of food. Illustrations and posters, excellently designed and attractively colored, are used to develop their imagination. But this is at the primary level only. At the higher levels of education, when they have developed the faculty to 'think food' without the aid of external objects, they are taught to 'de-think' food, because they run the risk of becoming overweight. This tendency is frowned down upon in that society.

They are told to concentrate on the problems of philosophy. Politics and the allied economical problems have lost all importance and relevance. These are the concern of the departments of history in the universities. People believe that all the tensions in the world, before the great change, were the result of poverty and hunger.

In schools, emphasis is laid upon thinking simple food only. (The word "eating" is not used anywhere.) Parents and teachers alike dissuade young students from thinking of foods rich in carbohydrates or those having a high fat content.

One teacher complained, "It is quite a job to keep the youngsters from thinking candies and chewing-gums. I have often detected the pictures of these hidden in their books." She continued with the advice, "I think that the parents have to have a greater control over the thinking tendencies of their children." And, indeed, I saw a crying child become quiet as soon as his mother gave him a picture of candy with the admonishment. "Don't think it too much, this can harm your health." Thinking is the word for 'eating'.

In the early stages of this great change, I was told, the governments of the countries with the burgeoning populations, adopted the slogan "Think More Food." The old slogan "Grow More Food" was dropped from

Later on with the benefits of the motto-"Thinking is Eating" becoming widespread, it is said that the then poor and developing nations were faced with a grave problem obesity! Having lazy and indolent populations, the governments felt concerned. This prompted the U.N. and other international agencies to send in experts to combat this menace. Those of the difficult persuasion had to be sent far from the cities to grow their own food. This had to be done to teach them how to think food properly, so that they didn't misuse this blessing.

The people, having great leisure and unencumbered with the problem of acquiring food, are very pleasant and sociable. Social get-togethers and sumptuous feasts are manages to acquire the pictures of exotic dishes for a considerable sum of money. All efforts are exerted to reproduce the original smells of these dishes.

Guests sit around the decorously and tastefully laid table. The host then invites them to think freely of the different dishes. The plates contain appetising pictures; rather unfamiliar 'thoughts' have names written on them. The ritual of thinking is carried on with decorum and solemnity, apparently with great rel-

The companies, which were engaged with the production, processing and packing of foodstuffs before the great change, are now engaged in producing the pictures of food, aromas, etc. and put them in beautiful, small cans. The shelves of the supermarkets are lined with them.

The cities and towns present a neat and clean look. No garbage or litter is to be seen anywhere. The energies of the people are devoted toward making their surroundings more beautiful. Arts and crafts have touched new heights of beauty and perfection. People spend their time creatively and are actively engaged in cultural pursuits.

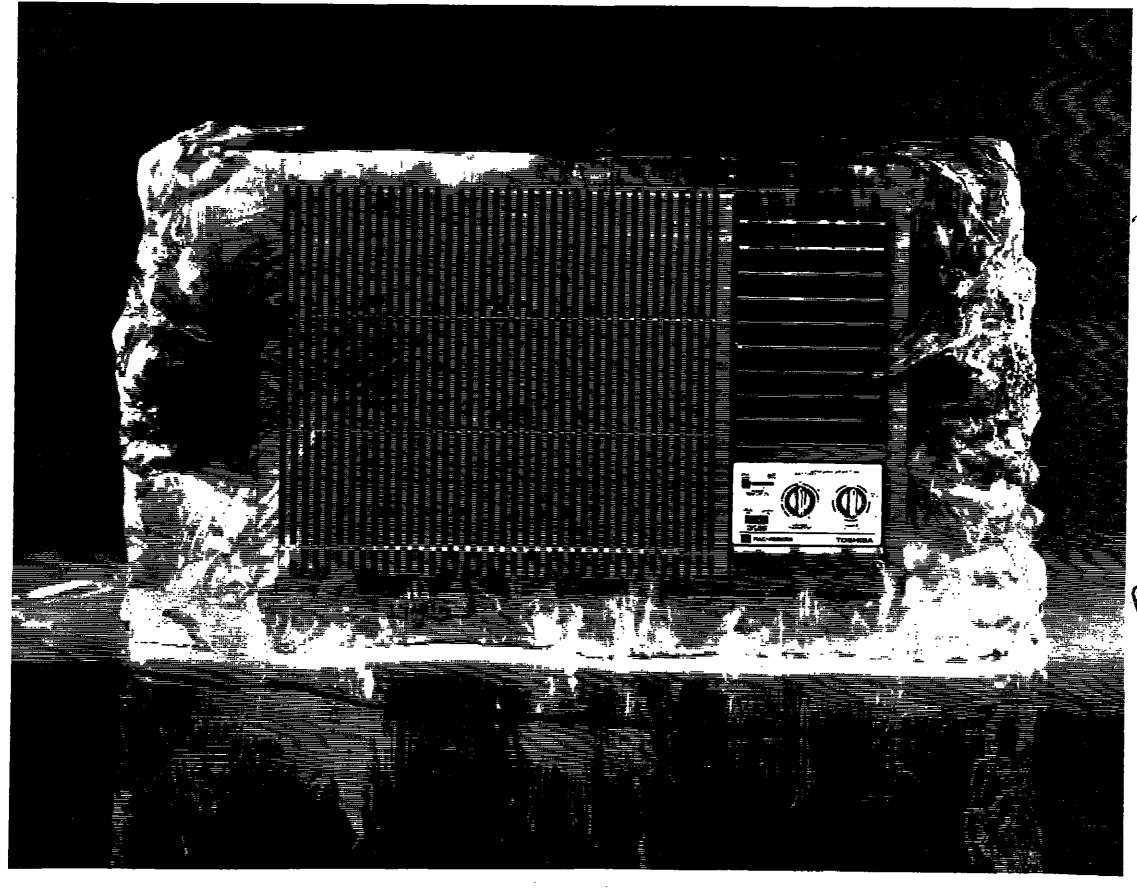

Different departments in the universities constantly break new ground in newer fields; disease is virtually unknown. The Departments of Chemical Biology and the Applied Sciences were busy developing a new technique called " Think Oxygen ". Without overcoming the problem of oxygen, I was told, it is impossible to carry on any meaningful research in space.

Feeling hungry and thirsty, and feeling slightly apprehensive lest someone tried to teach me how to "think oxygen" I decided to

And a leading Salvadoran leftist and former member of the junta, Guillermo Ungo, said the guerrillas would have won their war to overthrow the junta if it had not been for U.S. intervention, which he called "brutal and barefaced." The statement by delegates from 15 countries said the conditions for free elections in El Salvador do not exist because of political violence there, which is the "inheritance of half a century of pressure and flagrant human rights violations."

The statement, read by the secretarygeneral of Mexico's ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party, Pedro Ojeda Paullada, urged the United States "to put an end to its declared interventionist policy (in El Salvador) and to its economic support of the civilianmilitary junt ." It added that the elections for constituent assembly planned for next month are "an insult to the authentic electoral processes that democracy implies" and represent an attempt "to legitimize repression."

The permanent Conference of Latin American Political Parties (COPPAL) also reiterated its support of Nicaragua's leftist government and condemned the Reagan administration's "aggressive policy" toward Nicaragua. Ungo, now president of El Salvador's Democratic Revolutionary Front, spoke to reporters after attending the political confer-

The front, known by its Spanish acronym FDR, is an umbrella group of leftist opponents to El Salvador's U.S.-backed civilianmilitary junta. It is recognized as the political arm of a coalition of guerrilla groups battling the junta for power - the Farabundo Marti

Ungo, a member of the junta that took power in El Salvador after a military coup ousted the rightist regime of Carlos Humberto Romero in Oct. 1979, said leftists are convinced they can defeat the junta; militarily but seek a political solution to stop the bloodshed which has claimed an estimated 32,000 civilian lives since the junta was installed. Ungo was ousted from the junta in early 1980 in a move that some observers described as a creeping coup to the right.

There is will for peace on the part of revolutionary forces, "Ungo told reporters here, "and an opening to dialogue with all sectors of the country to find a peaceful solution to the crisis." He warned, however, "if a peaceful solution is not achieved the blood of 30,000 peasants in 1932 and of 30,000 victims in recent years will spur on guerrillas in their fight to the end."

The Reagan administration and the ruling junta in El Salvador are opposed to talks with Salvadoran leftists and instead are promoting elections of a constituent assembly planned for next month as the first step in a political solution to civil strife in the tiny Central American country. Leftists are boycotting the elections, claiming that a history of electoral fraud and the day-to-day violence in El Salvador make open and free elections impo-

Guerrillas bave vowed to continue in their fight to seize power in El Salvador "before, during and after" the elections. Ungo was here to attend two days of closed-door meetings of the COPPAL that concluded here Saturday.

Death toll rises in Soviet mishap

MOSCOW, Feb. 21 (R) - The death toll in a Moscow escalator accident last week was at least 15 persons and is likely to rise, informed Soviet sources said Sunday.

They said 13 persons were killed in the spot when the escalator to the Aviamotomaya Metro station in Moscow gave way Wednesday during the afternoon rush hour. About 50 had been injured, most of them seriously, and in the past four days at least two persons died in hospital. The death toll was high because the escalator continued moving after it had broken out of its casing and plunged into a shaft more than 20 meters deep, the sources

Escalator guards are positioned at the foot of all such stairways in Moscow stations and their job is to switch off the machinery in an emergency. The sources said it was not clear why this had not happened when the Aviamotornaya escalator fell in.

The station is one of many on the Moscow underground designed for use as a shelter in wartime and is deep below the surface. The sources said the long, steep escalator was packed with travelers at the time.

For Giscard interview

French journalist sacked

LONDON, Feb. 21 (AFP) — A French woman journalist, who resisted pressure to delete remarks about ex-Centrafrican Emperor Bokassa's diamonds, in an interview with former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, has been sacked from her job and subjected to a malicious "whispering campaign," The Sunday Times reported. In an article headed "A French Disgrace", Peter Wilsher, the newspaper's foreign editor said: "The whole episode, not to mince words, is a disgrace to French political life."

Anne-Elisabeth Moutet, then employed by the French weekly magazine VSD (Vendr edi, Samedi, Dimanche) interviewed Giscard d'Estaing last Feb. 4 on behalf of the Sunday Times. It was the first interview given by Giscard d'Estaing since his electoral defeat in May last year. The former president who was "not interested in speaking to the French press" was believed to have opted to make his media comeback through the foreign press, the newspaper said.

In the interview which was published on Feb. 7 in the Sunday Times, Giscard d'Estaing said accusations against him concerning diamonds he was alleged to have received before and after he became president, from the former ruler of Central Africa, became "so absurd" that it was pointless to answer them.

Giscard d'Estaing reportedly told Miss Moutet that the allegations concerning the diamonds were part of a pre-electoral smeer campaign orchestrated by the left "when they realized they could not beat me otherwise" Later, however, as Miss Moutet was transcribing the interview she received word from Giscard d'Estaing asking her to remove the references to the diamonds.

For more than two days, Miss Moutet was "under constant pressure to cut out all reference to the diamonds, to accept unspecified 'presents' if she showed proper understanding" and to save the jobs of Giscard staff members "who might be sacked if she did not comply," Wilsher wrote. The interview was published in its entirety with a "very gentle reference to the "pressures," ' the Sunday Times said. Since then, Miss Moutet has been sacked by VSD "without notice or compensation" on the dubious grounds that she gave the interview to another paper, although Giscard d'Estaing had said he did not wish to speak to the French press, and "has been subjected to a vicious whispering campaign designed to make it difficult, if not impossible, for her to obtain other employment.

"VSD's action appears to have been spontaneous and without political overtones," Wilsher wrote. The incident cast a "chilling light" on the French view of "freedom of information", Wilsher, added.

Japanese visitors robbed in Russia

MOSCOW, Feb. 21 (R) - Four senior Japanese nuclear experts were gassed with a sleep-inducing chemical and robbed during a visit to the Soviet Union, Japanese sources said Sunday.

The incident took place as the scientists, members of an eight-man Japanese delegation attending a nuclear energy seminar, were traveling on an overnight train from Moscow to Leningrad on Jan. 26, they said.

As one member of the group emerged from his compartment, feeling groggy he noticed that his wallet and passport had disappeared. He alerted his three colleagues, who found they had also been robbed. The leader of the group, a senior executive of the Hitachi Corporation, reported the incident to the authorities.

Tanzania said helping Mozambique

SALISBURY, Feb. 21 (AFP) — Tanzanian troops may be sent to help the Mozambican government in its fight against South African-backed rebels, a Zimbabwean newspaper reported Sunday.

The national weekly Sunday Mail, in a dispatch from its Maputo correspondent, said this was the likely consequence of the Feb. 13 meeting between presidents Samora Machel of Mozambique and Julius Nyerere of Tanzania in the northern Mozambique town of

The official Mozambican News Agency reported at the time that the presidents had agreed to increase military and economic cooperation between their neighboring states on Africa's east coast. The Mail recalled that Tanzanian troops had been stationed in Mozambique during the guerrilla war in then-Rhodesia to guard key installations against Rhodesian attacks.

In 1979, Tanzania sent 20,000 troops and police ito Uganda and, more recently, Nyerere dispatched several hundred military advisers to train the defense forces in the Seychelles.

The Mail said some of Machel's units were with the Tanzanians in Uganda. President Machel's government is currently fighting the Mozambique Resistance Movement (MNR), which is waging a guerri-lla war with South African support in the central provinces of Manica and Sofala.

U.S. report reveals Soviet chemical war

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21 (AP) — A secret intelligence report prepared for the White House provides "very grotesque" evidence that the Soviet Union used chemical warfare to kill thousands of people in Southeast Asia and Afghanistan, sources say,

U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig charged last week that the United States has "incontrovertible evidence" that the Soviets are using chemical weapons in Afghanistan. Laos and Cambodia. In a television interview Feb. 14, he said the poisons have killed "scores of thousands of non-combatats in all three target areas."

U.S. aid, not troops, sought SAN SALVADOR, Feb. 21 (R) — Saivarmed forces would also increase their cou-

adoran Defense Minister Jose Gillermo Garcia has declared that his government does not want American troops to help in its battle against left-wing guerrillas. But he told Reuters in an interview Saturday that the Salvadoran military wanted more U.S. aid and suggested it would be better for Washington to provide it than to "find themselves obliged to create another Vietnam in Central America."

The Reagan administration has pledged military aid of more than $80 million for this financial year to El Salvador, in the face of congressional opposition over human rights violations and some fears among the American public of eventual U.S. involvement in the fighting. Gen. Garcia said there are many other countries from which the civilian-military government could seek aid if it were cut off from Washington. But he declined to give specific examples. Asked if his forces, which are being trained with U.S. assistance, wanted any American soldiers to help them, he replied: "Absolutely not, neither Americans nor from anywhere else. We have never asked for them and we never will." Garcia recalled British wartime leader Winston Churchill's aid appeal to the United States - "Give us the tolls and we will do the job." He said: "I repeat this to the Americans... "Is it preferable for them to give us the assistance now to avoid a Vietnam or afterward find themselves obliged to create another Vietnam in Central Amer-

Three U.S. Congressmen, opponents of American aid to the Salvadoran junta, told a press conference Friday that Garcia had an arms shopping list including jets, transport planes, patrol boats and more than 180 helicopters. Garcia agreed that the Congressmen were correct in general ter s but added: "That is what we asked for. Don't you know one asks in accordance with what one really needs."

Garcia said in the interview that the presence of foreign observers at next month's elections for a constituent assembly would give moral support to his government. The leftists, who are boycotting the poll, would step up their guerrilla campaign as the March 28 election approached but the nter efforts, he said.

"As the elections approach we too will be dominating the situation because we are not going to be alone, but with the moral support of other peoples, represented here by the observers who will see at close angles the reality of what is happening in El Savador," the general added.

El Salvador's civilian-military junta had invited about 60 countries to send observers to the elections, but several have already declined and cast doubts on the validity of the poll. Garcia made it clear the government would consider a large turnout—"the great majority of the electorate" — as an endorsement of the elections and a rejection of the guerrillas.

"It doesn't matter to us who they vote for but that the people should vote," he said. "This voting will be practically a referendum for ourselves and for the world, in which the truth of what our people really want will be made known."

No left-wing party is contesting the elections, which the guerrillas have dismissed as an exercise to keep the country's current rulers in power. The government says their refusal to participate reflects lack of support among the people. Garcia was confident the elections would herald the decline of the guerrilla movement because of the increased backing the military would then have internationally.

"The elections are the beginning of the total destruction of subversion," he said. He pledged that the poll would be fair and that the military did not care who won. "To give you another demonstration of our neutrality, the armed forced, which have the constitutional right to vote, are not going to exercise it, and we are not going to vote," he

The general said the military had tightened up on violations of human rights by members of the armed forces, an issue often cited by opponents of U.S. government policy toward El Salvador and by humanitarian organizations.

I cannot assure you that there are no violations of human rights," he said. "But I can assure you what President Reagan has confirmed...and we have done everything possible to improve, as he said.

and Tanzania Sunday expressed grave concern at the "building up of military arsenals" in the Indian Ocean and pledged to work together to make the ocean a zone of peace. Speaking at a banquet he hosted for President Julius Nyerere of Tanzania. Indian President Sanjiva Reddy said the Indian Ocean was now bristling with lethal weaponry. It was necessary to strengthen efforts to reduce tension and peace in which both countries were cooperating, he said.

Nyerere, who arrived here earlier on a five-day state visit, also emphasized in his speech at the airport the need to make the Indian Ocean a zone of peace. India and Tanzania were working together toward this objective, he said.

Reddy lauded the Tanzanian role in Africa and said that its "inspiring participation in the activities of the front-line states had brought many gains to the people of the continent."

He criticized South Africa for its continued defiance of international public opinion and the sanctions against its odious racist policies. Reaffirming India's support to the freedom movements in southern Africa, Reddy said this country was "proud to link our arms with our friends in Africa in their battle against oppression and injustice." On Indo-Tanzanian relations, Reddy said these had grown in scope and depth over the years and that a close identity of views between the two countries on international politieconomic and commercial relations.

Noting that Nyerere was to receive the Third World Foundation award Monday. Reddy said that the award underlined Tanzania's commitment to the cuase of developing countries. The president called for increased cooperation among developing countries. President Reddy, Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, her cabinet colleagues and heads of diplomatic missions here were present at Delhi's Palam airport when the Indian Air Force plane carrying the visiting foreign dignitary touched down from the west coast city of Bombay. In his welcome address, Reddy said Nyerere had arrived on the eve of the 43-nation North-South" conference of developing countries beginning here Monday. "Your presence in India at this juncture will lend weight to the consultations that will take place and will provide a new impetus, in particular to economic, technical and other cooperation among the developing countries," Reddy said in his airport speech.

Nyerere's visit is likely to give a further boost to Indo-Tanzanian trade, which was put on a stable basis during the late 1960s and early 1970s. Initially India made a sizable contribution in building up small scale and cottage industries in Tanzania. Simultaneously a large number of trained professionals from India, including doctors, engineers and technicians, were recruited to assist in the planning and development of Tanzania.

Threatens NATO unity

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21 (R) — A Reagan administration bid to block construction of a Soviet natural gas pipeline to Western Europe would not only fail but could also harm NATO, according to a congressional report published Saturday.

The report by the Congressional Joint Economic Committee coincided with what appeared to be an emerging reassessment of the United States policy on the issue by the Reagan administration.

The report contended Western Europe and Japan would probably supply pipeline equipment which the administration has ordered U.S. makers to curtail, thus opening a breach in Western unity.

Assistant Secretary of State Robert Hormats told journalists Thursday that U.S. opposition to the $10 billion pipeline from Siberia must not be pressed to the point where it might be 'rupturing' the NATO alliance.

He said his view was shared by leading administration officials, although it appeared to differ from a harder approach by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger. Seven West European countries have been due to start television said this week work had begun on a south Russian section of the pipeline.

Shortly after martial law was declared in Poland on Dec. 13. President Reagan unilaterally imposed a series of new sanctions against the Soviet Union. Among these were the suspension of sales of U.S. oil and gas equipment, including pipe layers.

"The U.S. attempt to disrupt the gas pipeline could boomerang by undermining NATO unity on matters like defense spending and arms control negotiations," committee chairman Gesry Reuss, who wrote an introduction to the report, said.

"Finally, it won't work. Europe can get the pipeline equipment they need from their own sources and from Japan," he said. "What are we supposed to do if the NATO countries thus disregarded our demands - dissolve NATO?" In its attempt to block the pipeline, he said, "the administration may be shooting itself in the foot." The report resulted from questions by Reuss to administration officiails on East-West trade.

RIMINI, Italy, Feb. 21 - Italy's 12th International Fair for Hotel Catering and Foodstuffs came to a conclusion on Sunday, with more than 100,000 visitors attending, according to the president of the Rimini Fair Board. Rodolfo Lopes Pegna.

The fair which mainly dealt with food products, catering and food supply, was held in this city on the Adriatic Sea. It was opened Feb. 14 by the president of the Emilia-Romagna Regional Council Ottorino Barto-

Of the 801 companies participating in the annual fair. 303 were foreign companies representing 27 countries, mainly from the United States. Britain. France. West Germany. Japan, Holland, Belgium and Cuba. The fair is regarded here as Italy's first and most important food exhibition and as the third leading one in West Europe.

In an interview with Arab News, Rimini Fair Board President Lopes Pegna said that this year's fair attracted more than 100,000 Italian and foreign visitors compared with 95,000 visitors last year. The visitors were mainly marketing managers, businessmen and consumers. Asked whether the fair is yielding the desired results in regard to promoting the products and items exhibited. Lopes Pegna said, "Yes, the fair is giving good results and the sponsors of the fair as well as the companies participating in it are very satisfied." He disclosed that business increased by 20 percent last year as a result of the fair. "The fair is greatly helping in the expansion of business,"

In reply to another question, Lopes Pegna said that the Rimini Fair is seeking to expand trade and economic relations with the Arab countries, especially the Gulf states. "Every year delegations from Saudi Arabia and the Gulf states visit Rimini to discuss trade and economic matters of mutual interest," Lopes Pegna said. "Rimini is a bridge between Italy and the Arab world," he added.

The fair was organized by private and independent groups in Italy in close cooperation with the Italian Institute for Foreign Trade. These groups, which are recognized by the government, are specialized in supplying foodstuffs to hotels, restaurants, hospitals

This year there were 20 companies more exhibited at the fair covered the normal diet, such as meat, pasta, fish, sweets, dairy products, preserved and canned foods.

Finland wins order for costliest ship

HELSINKI, Feb. 21 (R) - A Finnish shiphuilding firm that relies on technical expertize to overcome relatively high labor costs has won a prized order from Britain for the world's most expensive cruise ship. -

The choice of the Waertsilae Company by the P and O (Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation) Line to build the $150 million vessel has dismayed Britain's own industry.

But the Finnish firm's price and its good record with cruise ships was too much for its international competitors in the bidding for the 40,000-ton liner, so far unnamed.

"We have specialized in vessels of this kind and this will be the 15th cruise ship we have built. We have had a big share of this market since 1970," said a Waertsilae director, Martin Saarikangas. "We can be relied on for good workmanship and we deliver on time. We also believe we are price competitive."

P and O said it approached 19 yards before selecting Waensilae. The choice sparked protests from British trade unions and politicians who thought the order should have gone to the state-owned British shipbuilders group or the Harland and Wolff Yard in Belfast which is about to lay off workers.

But P and O said the British yards could not satisfy its requirements on price and delivery dates for the new vessel.

Toyota, Daimler agree on tie-up

TOKYO, Feb. 21 (AFP) - Japan's tor automobile maker. Toyota Motor Co., and West Germany's Daimler Benz A.G. reached a basic agreement to produce Toyota trucks to be fitted with Benz diesel engines starting from the summer of 1984, informed sources here said Sunday.

The sources said that president of the West German auto maker will come to Tokyo next month to finalize the agreement.

According to the sources, Daimler Benz hoped to sell Toyota its 4,000 and 6,000 cc engines, to be produced at its newly-built plant in Indonesia, which is expected to be completed by the summer of 1984.

Toyota is at present assembling trucks in Indonesia bringing 4,000 to 6,000 cc engines from Japan. A Toyota spokesman, however, said that his company would have to carry out thorough market feasibility study before concluding the final agreement.

ICO to debate new coffee pact

LONDON, Feb. 21 (R) - The 72-nation talks to secure the 4th international coffee agreement open bere Monday.

The current six-year ICA which expires Sept. 30 this year, was extended last fall by a decision of the International Coffee Organization's council. The negotiations are provisionally planned to end in mid-June so that a new draft agreement can be discussed and approved by the council in July. This would free the council, when it meets again in September to devote its deliberations to setting export quotas for the 1982-83 crop year beginning Oct. 1. ICO sources said the organization has received a great number of proposals consumer members. All are based on the last two years of export quota operation and many of them break new ground.

U.K. hints at import curbs

LONDON, Feb. 21 (AFP) - Import controls were inevitable if Japanese exports to Britain continued to grow, British Trade Secretary John Biffen warned Sunday.

"I have got a basic disposition for open trade, but that doesn't mean to say that I believe in unconditional free trade," he said in a television interview.

The threat that is presented by success of the Japanese economy - and I don't use any moral terms in this at all - is that it is intruding upon the Western economies at a speed which simply is not socially acceptable.

Italian lire were devalued by three percent.

There were reports on Sunday that Irish monetary authorities also wanted to devalue the Irish pound, but that the government is hesitant to do so because of the uncertain outcome of last Thursday's legislative elections. In Copenhagen, government sources said Sunday, the EEC finance ministers will probably agree to a Danish crown devaluation of cent, in tandem with the franc devaluation, would be necessary to protect the Danish currency from speculative pressure on foreign exchange markets, the government sources said. The crown is one of the weakest currencies after the Belgian franc inside the European Monetary System (EMS).

Danish Central Bank Governor Erik Hof-Imeyer told Reuters a crown devaluation within the joint currency float was likely because of Denmark's high cost levels relative to other EMS countries and its large balance of payments deficit, which last year stood at 12.8 billion crowns ($1.6 billion).

Should the crown be devalued, parliament's nine political parties would be summoned to negotiations Sunday night on follow-up measures which could include adjustments in Denmark's inflation-linked threshold payments system and a partial price freeze, government sources said.

NEW YORK, Feb. 21 (AFP) - Slumping oil prices on world markets were reflected by price cuts in the United States this weekend. Standard Oil of Ohio slashed the price of

Riyal rates ease on dull day By J. H. Hammond

JEDDAH, Feb. 21 — Riyal deposit rates eased further Sunday trading in what was described as "a dull" trading day. Most institutions dealt in the extremely short-dated funds and overnight market but transactions volumes were low and dealers complained of 'wide quotes'. This phenomena is sometimes seen when the money markets are not sure of the direction that interest rates are taking and are trying to hedge themselves 'on both' sides of their bid and

The Sunday markets are traditionally inactive and taken over to analyzing what happened during the previous week and what might occur next. The Bahraini-based OBUs - offshore booking units - are sometimes active on Sundays, especially if the dollar had closed strong during the weekend, but traditionally they do not get involved in too many transactions on that day. It is of interest to note that the OBUIs had reduced Eurodollar interest rates further on Sunday, quoting the one-month rate at 14 15/16-15 1/16 percent and the one-year at 15 5/16-15 7/16 percent — almost 1/8 percent drop over Friday New York levels.

In the local markets, rival rates also dropped from Sunday opening levels by as much as 1/2 percent. With the sharpest drops being recorded in the short-dated funds. Week-fixed fell to 12-13 percent from 13-14 percent on opening, while the one-month rate was quoted at 1314-1334 percent. This compared with 141/2-15 percent Saturday opening. In the longer tenors, the one-year rate was quoted at 13%-14% percent which also was lower than Saturday's levels of 141/4-143/4 percent.

Warriors shut out Bullets

NEW YORK, Feb. 21 (AP) — It was anybody's game until the last quarter as the Golden State Warriors and the Washington Bullets battled it out in the National Basketball Association action Saturday night.

With the scores running level in the first two period — the teams were tied 45-45 at half-time — Washington went into the final period with a point advantage. But the last quarter blitz by Golden State saw them gain a 110-102 verdict, But it was close.

The late burst was led by the redoubtable World B. Free. He notched 26 points and Bernard King and Joe Barry Carroll added 19 each in Golden State's fine victory. The Warriors had 31 points to the Bullets' 22 in the decisive period.

In the other two NBA action Saturday night, Cleveland Cavaliers rolled past Dallas Mavericks 116-109, while New Jersey Nets trounced Utah Jazz 125-108.

The Cavaliers broke away from the Mavericks in the last period to snap a seven-game losing streak. The half-time saw the Cavaliers holding a point advantage, which they lost as the Mavericks outscored them in the third period. The Mavericks went into the final quarter with the score at 84-83.

It was one way street for the Nets — the victory street. The Nets took an early lead, which they never surrendered though the Jazz came quite close to bridging the gap in the second. But the last two period was completely dominated by New Jersey.

HOUSTON, Feb. 21 — All 24 of the participating players in the recent National Basketball Association (NBA) All-Star game were programed by biorhythm experts, who were present at the game. Nineteen of the 24 players lived up to their biorbythmic forecast, the experts reported after the game.

MVP of the game Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics showed a double high on the computer used to take his biorythms. Two other players had triple highs: Gus Williams and Moses Malone Biorythms measure good and bad days for people on three levels — emotional, physical and intellectual. A high rating means a good day and low rating indicates there's trouble ahead. For readings in between, you can count on just about anything.

England coasts through

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka, Feb. 21 (AP) — John Emburey, the Middlesex off-spinner, made a shambles of Sri Lanka's batting at the Colombo Oval Sunday to enable England to comfortably with the Test match here by seven wickets and a day to spare.

The home team, continuing from their overnight 152 for 3 wickets, were left in the lurch as the Englishman bowled rings around them to take five wickets for ten rounds. The last seven wickets fell for eight rounds in the prelunch session, making England a certain win-

Keith fletcher did not use his pacemen at all. Underwood and Emburey were brought into the attack from the moment play began with devastating effect. Duleep Mendis and Ranjan Madugalle, the overnight batsmen, took the score sedately to 167 before young Madugalle, who did extremely well during this English tour, was caught by Cook off Embureg.

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 21 (R) — A dispute which could have prevented countries in Europe, north Africa and the Middle East seeing the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles on television was settled, a spokeswoman for the Games said here.

She said a cheque for the final installment of $12 million to be paid by the European Broadcasting Union for the television rights was expected to arrive at the offices of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee soon.

The Union, which represent 31 countries in Europe, north Africa and the Middle East, had failed to complete its total payment of $19.8 million by the contract deadline of Feb. 1. The spokeswoman, Amy Collis, said the amount to be paid was never in dispute and the problem concerned very technical legal problems which she would not define.

She said Olympic officials and Union representatives had three days of productive negotiations here and the Union negotiators then

The Union informed the Los Angeles committee their negotiators' discussions had led to an agreement and the final installment was being sent from a San Francisco bank to the committee headquarters, Collis said.

The European payment of $19.8 million was well below the sum of $225 million paid by the ABC television network for the U.S. rights. Los Angeles Olympic officials had hoped at one time to obtain much more money for the European, north African and Middle Eastern rights by charging the countries separately.

On outcome of two-day seminar

F.A. chief doubts success

LONDON, Feb. 21 (AFP) — Professional football in England is facing a crisis but the two-day seminar starting Sunday of club chairmen could be a huge flop, Football Association Chairman Bert Millichip said Saturday.

Millichip, who will attend the Sunday-Monday meetings in Birmingham in his capacity as West Bromwich Albion chairman, said: "There are so many problems in the game, but I have a great feeling that nothing will come out of it at all."

"Half the chairmen going think it is a waste of time and experience tells me that I must be pessimistic. The chairmen have not agreed to much in the past so why should they, now," he added. Millichip, however, hopes the chairmen will accept that this could be soccer's one real chance to counter the crash cancer currently killing the game.

Apart from the pay freeze, he wants to see more entertaining soccer, with some sort of goals' incentive. Millichip also favors less television exposure, a re-think on the players' freedom of contract and an end to gentlemen's agreements over club's poaching managers.

Millichip continued: "Our main priority is to re-establish entertainment. Defensive attitudes have got to go and I think the time has come to give some sort of reward for goals. We should look at the points structure again."

Millichip. however, feels salaries are the main cause of the problems. "The time came long ago when Third and Fourth Division clubs should have gone part-time," he said. "I believe some Second Division sides could join them and it is beyond my comprehension why clubs doing well financially outside the league want to come in, the way things are at the moment".

On the freedom of contract front, Millichip insisted: "If has not been successful and has completely destroyed club unity. We should look at it again." He sees, however, no need to fall into line with common market countries and limit transfer fees: "I think we have seen the last one million pound deal," he

LOS ANGELES, Feb. 21 (AP) - Tom Weiskopf swung and missed at a shot in the third round of the $300,000 Glen Campbell-Los Angeles Open Golf Tournament, but he still finished the day in a tie for the lead with Johnny Miller.

Despite his triple bogey 6 on the 170-yard 16th hole, Weiskopf fired a 3-under par 68 over the Riviera Country Club Course, giving him an 11-under-par score of 202 for the three rounds over the 7,029-yard course with its par 35-36-71.

Marsh attributed Sunday's win to his ability to sink long putts. For Ginn, the expatriate victorian, his runner-up's prize could help him decide his golfing future. He was in two minds before the tournament about his future but will now give further thought to it after he begins playing in Asia for eight weeks, Perth then Europe.

"He nearly gave it to out," Ginn said referring to Marsh's lapse in the middle of Sunday

TOKYO, Feb. 21 (AP) - Battling cold rain, American Kirk Pfeffner finished 41 seconds ahead of England's Malcolm East Sunday to win the 30-kilometer International Marathon race here. The 28-year-old Pfeffner, who was placed second in the 1979 New York City Marathon, led more than 10,800 runners through the rain-swept western outskirts of Tokyo. Pfeffner's winning time was one hour, 31 minutes and 20 seconds. East, 25, who was fifth in last year's Boston Marathon, was second in 1:32.01. Third was Yasutoku Watanabe of Japan in 1:32.33. The American made sure of his victory when he burst in front of the Englishman near the 17-kilometer (10-mile) point after running shoulder to shoulder with the Englishman right from the start. The top woman finsiher was Miroo Kubtta of Japan, who was clocked in two hours and 13 seconds.

Kyle Heffner, 27, of the United States who finished ninth in the 1981 Boston Marathon, came in ninth place with a 1:37.24 clocking. The first Dutchman to finish was Bram Wassenaar, 37, who finished 20th in 1:38.12. Barr Netters, 32, and Gerard Mentink, 30, both of the Netherlands, finished in 22nd and 23rd places with times of 1:38.30 and 1:32.42 respectively. John Kelley, 25, two-time winner of the Boston Marathon, crossed the finish line in good conditions. Kelley's exact time and placing were not recorded. Kelley won the Boston race in 1935 and 1945.

Masuda's record run

Meanwhile, Akemi Masuda, 18-year-old national record-holder for the women's 3,000 and 5,000 meters, won the Marathon race of the 34th Chiba prefectural (State) track meet, clipping more than four minutes off the best Marathon time by any Japanese Masuda, a high school student in Chiba city, east of Tokyo, ran the 42.195 kilometer (26 miles, 385 yard) event in 2 hours, 36 minutes, 34 seconds in wet weather. The best time recorded so far is 2:40.56 by Nanae Sasaki, a veteran marathoner who has competed in several international races.

Masuda is expected to meet New Zealand's Allison Roe, winner of the 1981 Boston and New York Marathons, in the Chunicvi Marathon in Nagoyan central Japan, March 7. The 150 centimeter tall Japanese girl beat Coe and American Joan Benoit in a special 10,000-meter race at the fourth Asian Track and Field Meet in Tokyo last June.

Nadeem slams breezy 91

JEDDAH, Feb. 21 — Big victories were registered in the opening three matches of the Al-Hutaimi Cricket League last weekend.

The biggest being that of SAMCO, which had things much its own way against AQLS in its 187-run verdict. The run-riot was right from the offset. The openers, Kheizer (51) and Iqbal (40) set the tone of SAMCO's innings with a bright partnership. The foundation was further built upon by a brilliant unbeaten knock of 91 by Nadeem as SAMCO finished with a mammoth 241 in its assigned overs.

The only player to perform for AQLS was Abdul Rub, whose three wickets for 59, was the talking point of their contribution in the match. Faced with the insurmountable task of overhauling SAMCO's tally, AQLS crumbled to a paltry 54 runs with none of its batsmen reaching double figures. SAMCO's

Salman returned figures of four for 11 runs. New Star's showing was remarkable at Ali Siddiqui, set about retrieving the New Star innings with a sedate, but commanding 78 to see New Star to a total of 177 and later. lbrahim, called on rather late, put an end to Transcontinental's resistance with a deadly spell of four wickets for six runs. Ali was aided in New Star's revival by two useful contributions from Azizullah (24) and Younus (18). Transcontinental, chasing the target of 177 set by New Star, fared poorly and were shot out for 89 runs with only three batsmen coming to terms with New Star's attack. Khalid Nusrat (24), Khalid Muhammad (21) and Moin (18) led Transcontinental's resistance.

In the third match at Al-Hamra, Hashim defeated Saudi Resin by 63 runs. Hashim, opting to make the first use of the strip, began with the shaky opening partnership of 46 runs between Fazal (58) and Saudagar (16) and this enabled Hashim to finish with a modicum of respectability, to a tally of 133.

The task set was not a tough one. But Saudi Resin made heavy weather of its innings and also the sustained attack of Hameed, who had a haul of five wickets, saw Saudi Resin fall short by 63 runs. Zaheer Babar and Zaheeruddin were the only batsmen to reach double figures.

Nordic skiers keep stranglehold

HOLMENKOLLEN, Feb. 21 (AFP) -Nordic countries are continuing their stranglehold on the World Nordic Skiing Championships, despite the determined efforts of skiers from almost every other part of the world. After Friday's victory by Berit Aunli of Norway in the women's 10 km, compatriot Tom Sanderberg Saturday won the gold medal in the men's combine (ski jump and cross country). And Thomas Erikson of neighboring Sweden beat all the favorities to take the gold in the men's 30 km cross country. The thousands of Norwegians, who lined the route of the cross country race, thought for a long time that their countryman Lars Erik Eriksen was going to win a third Norwe-gian gold. The Oslo student began like a bullet and led for 20 km, and was still two seconds ahead of his Swedish near-namesake just five km from home, but he Norwegian begun to tire and his Swedish rival surged forward to finish 20 seconds ahead.

It's impossible to play bridge well if you react to situations mechanically. I'm reminded of this by a hand played in 1958 in the world championship match between Argentina and the United

The spade ten is clearly the better play at trick one. The natural urge to win the open-ing lead with the king of spades should be resisted. Dummy's 11 points and East's 12 points indicate that South has at most 17 points for his opening one notrump bid. (The Argentines were playing 16-to-18 point notrump bids.) West therefore can have at most one point in his hand and, in fact - according to the Rule of Eleven - it has to be the jack of spades. It follows that the ten of spades play at trick one is far more likely to defeat the contract than the king of

Cambodian groups to set up coalition

PEKING, Feb. 21 (R) — Former bitter enemies Prince Nordom Sihanouk and Khmer Rouge leader Khieu Samphan Sunday agreed bury their differences and form a coalition aimed at driving the Vietnamese out of Kampuchea.

Prince Sihanouk, who has frequently accused the Peking-backed Khmer Rouge of mass murder, said he and Samphan hoped that former Prime Minister Son Sann would meet them soon and join the coalition.

The prince, who was overthrown as head of state in 1970 after Lon Nol came to power in Cambodia (Kampuchea) told reporters after his meeting with Samphan that the proposed coalition would be based on Khmer Rouge institutions but that his faction would not adhere to their Marxist ideology.

U.S. tank becomes butt of jokes

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21 (AFP) The latest joke going around Washington these days concerns the newest, elite member of the U.S. Army Tank corp the $ 2.6 million M-1 Abrams.

The tank, just delivered to American troops in West Germany, has raised doubt among congressmen, the press and even Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, who question whether its "exceptional" qualities really outweigh its drawbacks.

The fact that the M-1 must be accompanied by an armored combat earthmover - a kind of bulldozer to help it dig in during battle — and an auxiliary fuel truck has fed right into the hands of humorists. "A $2.6 million baby which goes into battle with a butler and a nanny close behind," is how Washington Post columnist Mary McGrory described the tank.

But the celebrated humorist Art Buchwald pointed out: "The nice thing about the military is they never haggle over price." The mammoth, 59-ton tank is a gas monster, consuming 14 liters (about three gallons) of fuel per 1.6 kms. This is 30 percent more than the M-60 tank, its predecessor used by the army for the last 20 years.

The government General Accounting Office (GAO) noted in a report on the M-1 that despite its impressive 1,800-liter fuel tank, its range of action is half that of the M-60. Weinberger, meanwhile, questioned in a report issued to Congress this month whether the M-1 would have sufficient capacity to face up to the new, improved generation of Soviet tanks.

He specifically said that the M-1's 120-mm cannon could turn out to be incapable of penetrating the new type of armor on the Soviet tanks. The GAO report also raised the problem of maintenance, noting that the tank's transmission system appears more fragile than its builder wants to recognize.

Military officials have conceded that for the moment, the M-1 requires 1.7 hours of maintenance for every hour of service while its builder projected a maintenance time of 1.25 hours. Specialists believe this will reduce with time. But Sen. William Proxmire, the Democrat from Wisconsin who keeps a close watch on what he considers government waste, criticized the sending of the M-1 to Europe before its rough edges were smoothed over as another government "blunder".

The U.S. Army, however, has continued to defend its "$2.6 million baby" and already ordered 7,056 models to progressively replace the older M-60s. The M-1, which has a four-man crew, can travel 46 kms per hour over rugged terrain - two times faster than the M-60 - and 72 kms per hour on normal ground. Its turbine engine allows it to reach 30 kms per hour in six seconds — a lightning start considering its weight.

A computer on board also enables extreme precision in aiming at a target without requiring the tank to stop. M-60s have been equipped with this system since

Polish draft released on union future

WARSAW, Feb. 21 (R) — The Polish government Sunday published a draft on the future of the trade union movement and appealed to workers to resist a return to what it called the political extremism of the 16month Solidarity period.

sion and released by the official news agency PAP, did not say what would be done with Solidarity whose leaders were jailed and intemed after the December 1981 military takeover.

The committee which drew it up made no reference to any direct dialogue with the elected leaders of Solidarity. It praised the pro-Communist branch unions which rose as rivals to Solidarity after the independent union was formed in the summer of 1980.

The branch unions bad a far smaller impact in Poland than Solidarity which at the height of its power claimed the allegiance of nearly 10 million workers. The committee repeated accusations that Solidarity turned into a destructive political force, threatening the existence of the state and nation.

It conceded that strikes in 1980 which gave rise to Solidarity expressed "justified dissatisfaction" with the old union system.

The committee proposed that there should be a new union system which would be a compromise between the independence of Solidarity and the subservience of its predecessor, although the report indicated that in political balance it should resemble the latter.

It talked in terms of partnership between the government and any future union movement, clearly indicating that the unions world have to be subordinate to the ruling establ-

"The committee expresses an opinion that self-governed unions, independent of the administration and state apparatus, will be a common platform for the co-government of the country," it said. The committee made clear that future unions should stick to bread and butter issues, toe the political line and refrain from the national campaigns waged by Solidarity. The unions must uphold the Communist system, Poland's Soviet bloc alliances, the constitution and the leading role of the party, the committee said. The committee did not rule out the right to strike - one of the key concessions won by Solidarity in 1980 - but said it would only be permissible as a last resort.

Strikes should only be permissible after all other means have been exhausted ... There can be no place for strikes with political character," the committee said.

It recommended a return to unions based on industries rather than regions. The regional basis of Solidarity gave the movement a major weapon, enabling it to bring whole areas of the country to a standstill in selective

The committee held out an olive branch to the moderates in Solidarity saying that there was a place for everyone in a union except those "with a destructive attitude."

The committee did not address itself directly to the question of whether Solidarity would be reconstituted and said that workers themselves must decide what unions they wanted, "We are in favor of creative discussions," it said.

Haig-Weinberger feud affects policies

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21 (AFP) - The feud between Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and Secretary of State Alexander Haig, over the conduct of American foreign policy, has caused a serious malaise within the administration, according to recent daily press comment here.

Television commentators and press columnists see the two men as representing the two main tendencies in President Ronald Reagan's Republican administration, with Weinberger the hawk and Haig the dove.

The press has made much of their differences over the Middle East, the Polish crisis and North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) relations with the Soviet Union. Weinberger is seen as pushing for closer relations with the Arab states and greater European cooperation in Polish sanctions and NATO defense spending, while Haig is less anxious to disturb the status quo.

Even widespread talk over derisive remarks about world diplomats attributed to Haig by The Washington Post has not overshadowed interest in the Haig-Weinberger disputes.

The Post published Friday what it said extracts from transcripts of confidential State Department meetings in which Haig referred to "European cowardice", "Saudi arrogance", Britons who "lie through their teeth", and characterized British foreign secretary Lord Carrington as a "duplicitous bastard.

"I can't recall such exciting meetings at State," Haig told a press conference here Friday. "It couldn't have been me. It was too clear." he added. In any case, the press here has no doubt that Haig's differences with Weinberger are clear.

The defense secretary reportedly wants to change direction in the Middle East, reinforcing political and military relations with moderate Arab countries so that the United States is no longer subject to what some see as undue Israeli influence.

The secretary of state wants to see Israel maintain its technological military advantage in the region, while trying to maintain America's traditionally friendly relations with moderate Arab states.

But last week Weinberger visited Saudi Arabia and Jordan, by passing Israel. A senior offocial on his plane, quoted by the press here, indicated that Weinberger mentioned the possible sale to Jordan of F-16 fighter planes and hawk mobile missiles. He also reportedly suggested that U.S. policy in the Middle East could be reoriented.

President Reagan reacted to an outcry from Israel by pledging maintenance of Israeli military superiority over the Arab states. "There has been no change regarding our military supply relationship with Jor-dan," Reagan said in a letter to Israeli Prime Minister Menahem Begin.

Over European issues, the defense secretary has taken a decidedly harder line than his colleague from the State Department. Weinberger has criticized European nations for not supporting American sanctions against Poland, and has reproached NATO countries for not budgeting more money for defense to relieve the American Haig, a former NATO commander, has been more understanding toward America's European allies. The two men have tried to play down their widely publicized disputes. Haig recently told the American ABC television network that while there were clear differences between him and Weinberger, this was nothing new.

Each department looked at problems from a different point of view, Haig said. The two men have distinctly different backgrounds. Haig rose to international prominence when he took over chief of staff responsibilities at the White House during President Richard Nixon's fall from power between May 1973 to the winter of 1974 Haig, who had risen from obscurity in the Pentagon to assistant chief of staff, has not hidden his ambition to be president himself

He was accused of being unduly ambitious when he said he was in charge following the assassination attempt against President Reagan last March. In fact, the man who was next in military line of command after Vice President Bush was Weinberger.

The defense secretary has less experience in foreign affairs than Haig, but is closer to the president as an intimate of his panel of close advisers. A former California lawyer, the defense secretary is known for his intelligence and toughness of mind.

Meanwhile, the State Department said an investigation was being made to hunt down the source of embarrassing press leaks.
Officials in Washington said the government was likely to increase efforts to stop the flow of leaks which is known to anger President Reagan.

In previous attempts to stop leaks, the Reagan administration restricted contacts between aides and journalists but these were relaxed when reporters protested.

Aide deserts Nkomo, backs proposals for 'one party'

SALISBURY, Feb. 21 (AFP) - Joshua Nkomo's top political lieutenant effectively disassociated himself from the dismissed cabinet minister Sunday, as singus continued hering that Nkomo might face court action for his alleged plot against the Zimbabwe government.
Josiah Chinamano, vice president of Nkomo's minority Patriotic Front (PF) Party, told the national weekly Sunday Mail that he was prepared to "assist the courts in every way" in investigating the plot charges made by Prime Minister Robert Mugabe. Chinamano, who was one of three PF men dismissed from government along with Nkomo Wednesday (another has since quit). said he left the cabinet "with a clear consci-

He denied having known of the presence of hidden arms on properties associated with the PF, whose discovery early this month triggered the crisis in the 22-month-old coalition of the PF and Mugabe's majority Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU).

Chinamano also proclaimed his dedication to national unity and to a merger between the two longtime rival parties - a step that Mugabe has advocated but Nkomo rejected.

Chinamano's conciliatory statement contrasted sharply with Nkomo's remarks to reporters at his Bulawayo home Saturday. The PF leader, who has said that Mugabe lied in claiming he was in league with South Africa, said that Mugabe had acted against the PF to cover the fact that the prime minister's policies had failed.

Nkomo also said a security officer had stopped him from boarding sa Salisbury-Bulawayo flight the evening after his dismissal, and that his Salisbury house had been surrounded by unidentified men in five cars. He eventually drove to Bulawayo. Friday.

ZANU branches in several Zimbabwean towns have organized demonstrations calling for Nkomo's arrest, and the state television has said he has a "case of treason" to answer. The television screened an interview Sunday with Mugabe's security minister, who disclosed the arms finds over 10 days in what Nkomo called an "orchestrated campaign"

Murdoch begins talks with unions

LONDON, Feb. 21 (AFP) - Talks that opened Sunday between the management of Times newspaper Ltd. and Fleet Street trade union officials were expected to continue into the night in a last-ditch bid to save The Times and its stalemate, The Sunday Times, a management spokesman said.

Australian publisher Rupert Murdoch, owner of the two newspapers, has said he would close them down if the unions do not agree by Monday to a 25 percent cut in the newspapers' total workforce - the equivalent of 600 jobs.

Meanwhile, the Times' staff continued work as usual Sunday on the paper's Monday edition. The editor in chief, Harold Evans, said he hoped the seven unions involved in the talks would show that they were aware of the importance of saving the jobs not threatened by the Murdoch plan.

Owen O'Brien, head of the printers union Natsopa, Sunday said he was "more hopeful now because we are talking." He added that Murdoch might be willing to push back his closing ultimatum if the unions promise to undertake "meaningful negotiations." Murdoch, who flew in here Friday from his

New York headquarters, replied, "I don't know," when asked Sunday morning before the talks opened if the two newspapers could be saved.

S. Africa searches for missing seamen

CAPE TOWN, Feb. 21 (R) - Military aircraft took off at first light Sunday to continue the search for 15 missing seamen from the South African Navy frigate President Kruger which sank after a collision last Thursday. The chief of South Africa's Navy Vice Adm. Ronald Edward, announced Saturday night, however, that the ships taking part in the search had been recalled to base at Simonstown near here.

The Johannesburg Sanday Express newspaper quoted a former commander of Presi dent Kruger, Rear Adm. George Green, as saying there was no chance of anybody surviving in the open sea in the deteriorating conditions.

All but 16 of the frigate's 193 crew men were rescued by ships and helicopters after a predawn collision with the supply ship Tafel berg during a gale in the Atlantic southwest of the Cape of Good Hope. One body was found Friday. The loss of President Kruger was the country's worst naval disaster since World

Each of the cards consists of a batch of detachable coupons on which are printed the month for they are valid, the category of product, and the ration the cardholder is entitled to at any one time.

The basic monthly meat ration is at present 2.5 kilos per citizen, 7 kilos for miners, and 4 kilos for a dozen select categories, including manual workers, city-dwelling adolescents between the ages of 13 and 19, women in 17th week of pregnancy and after, athletes. invalids, blood donors, armed forces personnel and the militia, and flying crew in civil aviation. #### visit Moscow Jaruzelski to MOSCOW, Feb. 21 (AP) — Polish leader Wojciech Jaruzelski will visit the Soviet Union in early March, the Soviet news agency Tass announced Sunday. It will be his first trip to Moscow since the declaration of martial law in Poland on Dec. 13. No date for the visit has been announced.

Jaruzelski is almost sure to meet with Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev for a detailed discussion about how the Polish regime is faring in asserting its control. The announcement of the visit came amid growing signs of unrest in Poland. Meanwhile, Polish government officials said Saturday a coal miner in the Polish region of Silesia had died when a parcel bomb exploded in his hand. There have also been reports recently about the shooting of a Polish police officer and the explosion of mining explosives in a Wroclaw hotel last

A Polish government spokesman Friday warned that military rule in Poland may be tightened further if Poland's underground opposition tries to challenge Jaruzelski's government. The spokesman, Jerzy Urban, was quoted by the Polish news agency PAP as saying leaflets being circulated in Poland have warned the government: "The winter is yours. But the spring will be ours."
